History of Joseph.

The life of this man, as it is recorded in the Sacred History, illustrates in a striking manner how God exerts a control in human affairs, while at the same time there is the utmost freedom on the part of those who are instrumental in bringing to pass what he has appointed. It had been told to Abraham that his descendants should serve in a strange land for a certain period, at the end of which time they should be brought back to Canaan. This was one of the certainties of the future. It was just as much destined to take place as anything could be, and yet it was brought about by a train of events in which the actors did not dream of what they were doing. Joseph was a youth of singular uprightness. He was his father's favorite. He wore a coat of many colors. He reported the evil doings of his brethren. He had a dream and told it. He was sent to visit his brethren. He was cast into a pit, at the suggestion of his oldest brother, who meant in this way to save him. Just then a company of marchantmen came to the place on their way to Egypt, and Joseph is sold as a slave. In Egypt he is bought by a man in high position. He is falsely accused and cast into prison. His fellow prisoners dream, and he interprets their dreams. Two years later Pharaoh has a dream and Joseph is sent for, and does the same for him. There is a famine in the land, and so forth. Thus the chain by which God was preparing for what was to take place had so many links. So now, in the midst of the people, with their diverse characters their love and hatred, their envy and jealousy, their plotting and scheming, and in the midst of the various things that take place, God is ruling and presiding and bringing to pass what he has determined.

Is "Damn" an Oath?

"Damn," as a noun substantative, is an old regular word, used frequently in English writers down to the first part of the seventeenth century. We do not see why so ponderous a word has been dropped by lexicographers. In some places, as, if we speak of how original sin lies heavy on us, it seems a most appropriate word. "We inherit, with Adam's nature, the damn cleaving to it?" This use of the word came down to our American grandfathers, and lasted even till the time when the "continental currency" was a "dead loss." So came the expression: "Not worth a continental;" "Not worth a continental damn," or "dead loss." And, for short: "Not worth a damn" —or bit of paper that was a dead loss! It is not to the credit of our American lexicographers that they have not recognized this origin of a phrase peculiarly American, and that, if "slang" at first, having a basis in fact, like a countless number of other words, has been enrolled as a factor in our accepted language—as "gerrymandering" has been. The people did better than their writers of primers, grammars and dictionaries. They kept the old words. Damn means a loss—(in American parlance, as above, a worthless scrip.) Damnable, for its general meaning, signifies "worthy of severe censure." Only when used in a theological connection does it imply what Puritans suppose. It, most certainly, is not "swearing!" And, except by the imposition of Puritan signification, it is not cursing! And yet we remember hearing people, using a phrase whose history they know not, say "I do not care a cuss"—meaning a curse.—Freeman's Journal (Catholic.)

What Van. might do with His Money.

Some one has made a very curious calculation of what Mr. Vanderbilt could do with his money. William H. Vanderbilt's income from his investments in $51,000,000 four per cent. government bonds is represented at $5,000 daily, which is $208.25 per hour, $3.47 per minute or over five cents per second. Assuming that he is paid by the second, he cannot possibly spend his money, as he could not select his purchases and lay down the prices fast enough. He could not throw it away—to pick up, cast, recover, pick up and cast again would take him two seconds, and if he worked all through the twenty-four hours without rest, he could not dispose of one-half his income. By living economically, saving up for four years, he could, placing his five cent pieces side by side, make a nickle belt around the earth, or by converting his savings into one-cent pieces and mounting them in a pile he would in twenty years erect a road to the moon and have $500 to invest when he got there. Should his amusement take a charitable twist, he could out of a year's receipts, donate to every man, woman and child in the United States twenty cents and have money left over. Other vast possibilities occur to the glowing fancy of the calculator. In one day he could go to 8,000 different circuses, eat 10,000 pints of peanuts, drink 5,000 glasses of lemonade and have money left to get his boots blacked. He can afford to have 500,000 shirts washed in one day, and on the day of his death his income will buy ten first-class funerals.

"What do you know about the cuckoo?" asked a school teacher of little Johnny. "Nuffin, 'cept he don't lay his eggs himself."

A La Crosse minister prayed for those "who are smitten with illness, and those who have gone a fishing, and also those too lazy to dress for church."

There are lots of folks in this world who, rather than not find any fault at all, wouldn't hesitate to say of an angle worm, that his tail was altogether too long for the rest of his body.

Forney's Progress copies the following epitaph from a tomb near Versailles: "Except in 1859, during which for several days she took lessons on the piano, her life was without a stain."

In what condition was the patriarch Job at the end of his life?" asked a Brooklyn Sunday-school teacher of a quiet looking boy at the foot of the class. "Dead," calmly replied the young boy.

A minstrel performer proudly advertises himself in the amusement papers as the "largest-mouthed comedian in the world," and adds: "Many envy and imitate me, but there is none can compete with me."

At a printer's festival lately, the following toast was offered: "Woman! Second only to the press in the dissemination of news." The ladies are yet undecided whether to regard this as a compliment or not.

"You smoke too much, my dear fellow—positively you do. You'll ruin your health!" "Who? I? Oh, bless you, no!" "But you do—you smoke an ounce a day at least." "But, then, look at the small pipe I smoke it in!"

When a cough sounds like Croup—that is, dry and hard—do not delay an instant! Give Downs' Elixir often enough to keep the cough loose, and the danger will soon be over.

Death to rats and vermin, Parsons' Exterminator.

Marry No Tippler.

How many young ladies there are who, in spite of the wretchedness they see daily resulting from marrying tipplers, are still willing to run the risk themselves. They cannot be brought to believe that the one glass taken now and then will, in nine cases out of ten, increase to three, four, five, and even more, until the habit has a man in its grasp, as a vise—never to relax its hold, until the wife and family have run throunh the whole gamut of wretchedness, and death closes the scene.

Shame and sorrow follow in the footsteps of the drinking man a sure as night follows day. Girls often refuse a man because he is poor, or his social position does not please; but how many girls would refuse a rich tippler? Wealth blinds them to the terrible future which a drunkard will bring them to—wealth cannot, however, soothe the pangs of disappointment and disgrace which an intemperate man causes his family.

Girls, take a friend's advice. Reject the hand of a man who will not abstain from the intoxicating cup. Your happiness and respectability in this life, perchance your salvation in the next, are involved in this question. Marry a tetotaler though he be poor—though his garments be coarse, his manners a trifle rough; he can cultivate the latter, and when his fortune changes, as change it will, his outward garb can also be improved; and what is there so noble as a young man who has virtue, character, integrity? Only one thing—the girl who has sense enough to appreciate these qualities, and who, by wedding them, insures herself a peaceful and self-respecting life.

Physics Without Apparatus.

BOILING WATER IN A SHEET OF PAPER.

In Nature are given experiments for boiling water and melting lead on a piece of paper:

Take a piece of paper and fold it up, as school boys do, into a square box without a lid. Hang this up to a walking stick by four threads, and support the stick on books or other convenient props. Then a lamp or taper must be placed under this dainty caldron. In a few moments the water will boil.

The only fear is lest the threads should catch fire and let the water spill into the lamp and over the table. The flame must therefore not be too large. The paper does not burn, because it is wet; and even if it resisted the wet it would not be burned through because the heat imparted to it one side by the flame would be very rapidly conducted away by the other.

Another experiment of a similar nature, but perhaps even more striking, is as follows: Twist up the edges of a common playing card or other bit of card-board so as to fashion it into a light tray. On this tray place a layer of small shot or bits of lead and heat it over the flame of a lamp. The lead will melt but the card will not burn. It may be charred a little around the edge but immediately below the lead it will not be burned, for here again the lead conducts off the heat one side as fast as it is supplied on the other.

Schools As They Are.

The present object of school life is to furnish that instruction in book lore that parents cannot or have not leisure to impart. The tendency, however, is toward a great variety of studies, many of them unpractical and useless, and usually the boy or girl graduates with as little knowledge of the real demands of life as he or she had upon entering this interesting period. The pupil is stimulated to make great exertions, intellectually, at the expense of bodily health. Healthy, happy school children are rare. Headaches, languor, pallid faces are the rule, owing, we believe, to the mistakes committed in the present method of school instruction.

Long lessons are given out which entail work at night; the child is robbed of its season for rest and recreation, loses its mental strength, and becomes a discontented drudge, taking little interest in the very studies, which, if properly pursued, would create a desire to cultivate the mind. The latter object is frustrated by the multiplicity of subjects presented, and by the foolish pride of parents, who insist upon their children taking up a number of topics with the hope that they will be brilliant and outshine their companions.

A change in the direction of less studies and fewer hours of study, would tend to improvement in the physical health of our young people, and a corresponding gain mentally, for "a sound mind can only inhabit a sound body."

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

Eating Lemons.

A good deal has been said through the papers about the healthfulness of lemons. The latest advice as to how to use them so they will do the most good runs as follows: Most people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few know how it is more than doubled by taking another at night, also. The way to get the better of a bilious system without blue pills or quinine, is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as the appetite craves, in as much ice-water as makes it pleasant to drink, without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning on rising, or at least half an hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clear the system of humors and bile, with mild efficacy, without any of the weakening effects of calomel or congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear; the powerful acid of the juice, which is almost corrosive, infallibly produces inflammation after a while, but properly diluted, so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its full medicinal work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food has abundant opportunity to work on the system thoroughly.

A Physician of Great Prominence in thirty-sixth street, New York city was unable to even help Mr. Wm. McKee, of Patterson, N. J., suffering the agonies always attendant upon diseased kidneys. As an honest man and practitioner he prescribed and cured him by using one bottle of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Ayer's
Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual for preserving the hair. It restores, to the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray hair, light, and red hair, to a rich brown or black, as may be desired. By its use the hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks the falling of the hair immediately, and causes a growth in all cases where the roots are not decayed; while to brushy, weak and otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vigor and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff, and, by its cooling, stimulating, and healing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

A Civil-Service Reform League has been organized at Chicago. Its objects as stated in the constitution, are these: The League, by publishing and circulating documents, by conducting public meetings, by promoting discussion by interrogating candidates for office and by the nomination, when expedient, of candidates in harmony with its views, will endeavor to foster a public sentiment in favor of a reform in the civil-service, based upon the following:

1. Appointments should be made to all subordinate places, in national state and municipal offices without regard to politics. Competitive examinations should be open to all, and the persons successful in them should be appointed on probation. If they prove themselves fit they should be permanently appointed, and should serve during efficiency, or for a fixed term of reasonable length, with reappointment in case of continual fitness.

2. No assessments upon employees of the public for political purposes should be permitted.

Uncle Tom's Cabin

And the Memphis University Students. Those who are looking forward with eager anticipation to the pleasure offered at the Opera House, Monday evening, Dec. 5th, in the rendition of Uncle Tom's Cabin by the Ideal company, will, we feel sure, find their anticipations more than realized. There is not a poor feature or a poor artist in this comany, which has crowded the opera houses in our large cities from pit to dome. Uncle Tom's Cabin has lost none of its old time popularity. The present revival is without precedent in the history of any domestic work. The story with its pathetic scenes and humorous incidents ever proves attractive, and whether by the comicalities of Topsy, the faithful devotion of Uncle Tom, the graces of Eva, or the cruelty of Legree, every hearer finds something to charm. Miss Kittie Lougee, in Topsy, portrays the character in a most realistic manner and her songs, dances and banjo solos never fail to please. The transformation scene at the close, entitled Rock of Ages, or Eva in Heaven, is very beautiful and impressive. Those who have not procured their tickets should delay no longer. Remember that in other places hundreds have been turned away from the hall, unable to gain admission.

A Deserved Compliment.

The American Public Health Association holds its annual meeting at Savannah, Ga., commencing Nov. 29, and continuing four days. This society is a national association, sanctioned by the U. S. Government. It brings together the leading sanitarians of the United States, and affords the best opportunities of gaining information regarding matters pertaining to the public health. Dr. R. B. House, of Tecumseh, received an invitation to deliver an address before the association, and was tendered free passes to Savannah and return. He had designed to accept the invitation, but his professional duties have lately crowded upon him to such an extent that he was compelled to forego the pleasure of attending the meeting.—The compliment was well deserved, and we regret that Dr. House found it impossible to fill the appointment.

RUMORS have been afloat for several days that our townsman, Col. Fitzsimmons had taken a trip to Central America. Late dispatches from Panama contain this intelligence:

Among the passengers from New York by the Colon, which arrived at Aspinwall on Nov. 8, were Gen. Daniel Butterfield, of New York accompanied by Col. G. M. Totten, formerly a resident on the isthmus, at present consulting engineer of the Panama Canal; Col. Fitzsimmons, of Michigan, and Col. G. Nanne, of Gautemala. These gentlemen are on their way to Gautemala to examine into the railway project from San Jose to the city of Gautemala on behalf of a syndicate of New York capitalists, who will join Gen. Butterfield in building the road if their examination proves satisfactory.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION.

President Arthur's private secretary states that the executive edict in having no copies of his message to congress printed was to remove temptation from the press. Copies will be furnished to both associated presses only.

A NEW COALING STATION.

The United States steamship Dispatch will proceed as soon as practicable to Samana bay, San Domingo, W. T., and survey the same. It is supposed that this survey is preliminary to the establishment of a coaling station for the use of the American ships of war guarding the interests of the United States in the vicinity of the Isthmus.

JUSTICE SHANNON.

The term of office of Chief Justice Shannon, of Dakota, formerly of Pittsburg, expires shortly. He has held office eight years. Numerous petitions, signed by everybody, from Gov. Ordway down, have been received by the president. Shannon will probably secure his reappointment, although Delegate Pettigrew and others have opposed it.

JUDGE COX'S MANAGEMENT.

Judge Cox, who is presiding over the Guiteau trial, is daily in receipt of letters, some anonymous, expressing the displeasure of the writers at his Honor's management of the case. Many of the letters are abusive and others are threatening. Those who have observed the difficulties under which the Judge is laboring cannot but be impressed with the tact he has shown in conducting the trial.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR.

President Arthur will occupy the northwest corner room at the White House, which was used as a guests' chamber during the Hayes regime. It was Mollie Garfield's room as long as she was at the White House. It was also occupied by Miss Harriet Lane, President Taylor, and the little son of President Lincoln. Both died in it. The Prince of Wales once slept in it, and General Burnside, the night he was given command of the Army of the Potomac. It has been entirely refurnished.

AN IDIOT PLACED BEHIND THE BARS.

An individual named William Steward Hubbard, alias Albert Lyman, registered at the Ebbitt house, claiming to be from New York. He asked for the three best rooms in the house, but one only was given him. Soon after, he was found stripped to the flesh, and when asked for a deposit turned over an empty purse. He claims he had come here to save the world, and was to a certain extent Guiteau. He said he could solve the Garfield problem but had not the time, and that his intentions were foiled when he was placed behind the bars.

THE PHILADELPHIA CASES.

The alleged Philadelphia star-route conspirators were on Friday required to renew their bail in the sum of $5,000 each. At the February term of the District court the cases will be called for trial, unless the district attorney is otherwise instructed by the Washington authorities. A prominent United States official being questioned on the subject of the abandonment of the cases, indignantly denied any such intentions, saying the government is determined to punish the parties who have successfully cheated it.

NATIONAL MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Preparations are already in progress for the national memorial services to be held in the house of representatives, at the capitol, in honor of the martyred president, some time before the holiday recess of congress. They will be very impressive in character. The great hall in which the obsequies of Lincoln were held, will be draped in black. All the seats in the galleries and on the floor will be reserved for prominent men and women. If the programme partly formed is carried out, two orators (of whom Senator Sherman will probably be one,) and two representatives (of whom J. Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, will probably be one) will deliver memorial addresses after Rev. Mr. Powers shall have offered prayer. A poem, written by Mrs. Harrison Glazeer, formerly of Hiram college, will be read by Representative A. H. Pettibone, of Tennessee, formerly of Hiram college, and the Marine band will render appropriate music.

GUITEAU'S TRIAL.

In the Guiteau case Mr. Robinson said the doctors were to blame. I want an intelligent statement of the case. As my own counsel in the case, I shall hold the right to make corrections when I please. Such corrections as I make, I shall make the matter is but a trifle. I did not expect to be asked to make a speech to-day. I have no set speech prepared, and I don't care to make one. I have one word to say, however, in regard to misjudgment. I only want to have shown that I am not insane. I am obliged to the court and counsel for this privilege. I have no more to say."

Mr. Scoville then began his argument. He addressed the jury in a conversational tone, and called the attention of the jury to the plea of insanity set up by the defense, citing numerous cases and rulings in noted cases. He said the newspapers had intimated that Guiteau was only feigning insanity, and such seemed to be the general theory of the public. Guiteau turned uneasily in his chair, and with quick, nervous articulation, said: "I never feign. I act myself, sane or insane."

Without noting the interruption, Mr. Scoville alluded to the arrest of a man at the time of President Hayes's inauguration who was sent to an insane asylum. "This man," he said, "had as fully made his arrangements to kill President Hayes as did Guiteau to kill President Garfield, and but for his arrest might have succeeded." There was just as much ground to indicate Guiteau's insanity. "Why," said Scoville, "even President Garfield said: 'Why did this man do it? He must be insane.' Many must have believed Guiteau insane."

Col. Corkhill here arose, and, with much emphasis, said: "If you will allow me, Mr. Scoville, the prosecution now said to doubt be insane. He thought him sane. Himself never thought him insane. He said under oath that he believed him sane."

To illustrate Guiteau's freaks, and as an indication of his insanity, Mr. Scoville related his rambling attempt to make a speech upon a certain occasion when he had been assigned by the court as counsel for a prisoner on trial. Guiteau again interrupted in an excited manner, and shouted: "That's absolutely false! I never tried a case with Charley Reed in my life. I don't want to interfere with your theory, but your facts are false. I want the jury to understand my position fairly; that's all right. There are a good many people who will swear I am insane."

Mr. Scoville began his argument. He addressed the jury in a conversational tone, and called the attention of the jury to the plea of insanity set up by the defense, citing numerous cases and rulings in noted cases. He said the newspapers had intimated that Guiteau was only feigning insanity, and such seemed to be the general theory of the public. At the request of Mr. Scoville the prisoner was here given permission to address the jury. Guiteau began to talk as he sat in his chair. Mr. Scoville asked him to rise. "Thank you, I don't care to stand up," said Guiteau. "I am not bound to, however, but I have only a moment to talk. I did not expect to be asked to make a speech to-day. I have no set speech prepared, and I don't care to make one. I have one word to say, however, in regard to misjudgment. I only want to have shown that I am not insane. I am obliged to the court and counsel for this privilege. I have no more to say."

Scoville then continued the recital of Guiteau's life, showing that he did not pay board bills and car-fare, and was an habitual liar. He also called attention to Guiteau's susceptibility to woman's society. Guiteau seemed to think he could marry any woman he chose to ask.

"That is a lie," interrupted Guiteau.

"Scoville cited the case of a lady with $10,000, and said that Guiteau really expected to be the honest husband of an honest woman.

The letters written by Guiteau to his friends while he was at Oneida, were then read. At 5 p. m. the court adjourned, Scoville requiring a few more hours to complete his argument.

The crowd yelled and hissed the prisoner as he was led to the van shouting "kill him." Mr. Scoville said the case would not be finished before New Year.

The first question raised on Wednesday was about the clippings from newspapers left in depôt by the assassin Guiteau. Guiteau chimed in with his whilom glibness. He came to court to-day full of the idea that he was directing the proceedings chiefly, and Scoville had not proceeded far before the prisoner had occasion to lose his temper because things did not go to suit him.

"You can't show that I am a fool," he said, with vehemence; "I don't approve of your argument. You can't make me submit to your lying. As long as you speak the truth you have my approval, but this line of argument is false."

The District Attorney protested against his interruptions, and Guiteau, with a deprecatory motion of the head, said:

"There is no need for a speech, Colonel. I will keep order, only I must have things go right."

The letters read by Scoville were simply shocking in their blasphemous flippancy. They were from Guiteau to his father, in the course of which he spoke of the three persons of the Holy Trinity with a familiarity that could only properly exist between human friends of the closest kind. One of the letters read referred to his client's detention in the jail at Chicago. During the reading Guiteau interrupted, saying: "I was locked up by a miserable little whelp for a $22 difference between us, but was let right out." Another letter states that he was put into the Oneida community by his father. Guiteau said: "It makes me sick to think of the miserable, stinking community business." Scoville continued about Guiteau's failure as a public speaker, and Guiteau broke in with: "I had brains enough, but I had no reputation. They wanted a man like Grant or Conkling, or some one who would draw. I guess I'd draw now well enough." [Laughter.] Guiteau continued, "Don't try to make me out a fool, and put the case or the plea on that. I was acting for the Deity.' Guiteau continued that if Scoville would tell the truth he would not interrupt. Scoville answered that he would only follow Corkhill's example. Guiteau retorted: "Corkhill made a good speech." Scoville attempted to continue his address. Guiteau resumed his interruptions, and finally Judge Cox told him he must stop or he would be removed.

A few witnesses for the defense were examined, the most important being Dr. Jno. A. Rice, of Merton, Wis., who in 1876 was called by Mrs. Scoville to examine Guiteau and then pronounced him insane and dangerous.

There was the usual crowd in the court-room Friday morning, and the court, before beginning the trial, warned those present against any expressions of approval or disapproval. Guiteau was then given a few minutes to address the court, and read a paper peculiarly constructed, setting forth some of his ideas. He read in a dramatic and somewhat eloquent manner. The statement was a long, rambling document, in which he says that he intends to have all the facts go to the jury, and for this reason he continually interrupted counsel and witnesses. He was determined that every fact in his career bearing on the question as to who fired that shot, the Deity or himself, should be presented; hence everything connected with his personal and theological record will be developed. He placed great stress on the editorials in newspapers last spring denouncing Garfield for using the patronage in a manner inimical to the Republican party, and said he certainly never would have shot the president but for them, and therefore the newspapers should bear their just portion of the odium and responsibility, as should also the doctors who actually killed the president, as except for their treatment he would be alive to-day. He was not afraid of death; he was certain of his destiny, as the Lord inspired the act, as He did in the case of Abraham and scores of other cases mentioned in the bible. Guiteau then paid particular attention to "cranks," warning them to keep away from him at the peril of instant death. He said that Jones, who fired at him last Saturday, would have been shot dead except that the horses reared at the moment the guard shot at him. He asked only that the jury dispose of the case on facts and law, and leave all responsibility about it to the verdict.

There was a sharp tilt between Scoville and Davidge over the newspaper clippings found on Guiteau when he was arrested, which ended in Scoville's getting possession of the papers. Guiteau then made a second speech, saying he understood his divorced wife was in court, and wanted it understood that if she came there to do him harm he would rip up her character. There were some things interesting concerning her career in Philadelphia.

During the examination of witnesses Guiteau, as usual, continued his interruptions until Judge Cox told him if he did not stop he would be gagged. The general weight of testimony thus far indicates undoubted insanity, not only in the prisoner but also in the elder Guiteau.

Thomas North resumed the witness-stand, and was cross examined very closely and at a great length by Davidge. Guiteau interrupted at the very outset, and protested there was no truth in witness' story. [Witness was being questioned in relation to a fight between Guiteau and his father, Luther W. Guiteau.] He had a good memory, and could remember most everything, but did not recall any such scene.

Just as witness was released from the stand Guiteau improved the momentary lull to make the first speech of the day. He said: "I notice my friend Henry Ward Beecher is doing some cranky work on this case. I used to attend his church and prayer-meeting, and if your Honor knew him as well as I do you would not pay any attention to him. There are a good many people that think he is badly cranked socially, and I have no doubt that Mrs. Tilton told the truth and that he lied about it, and I told him so publicly."

"Oh, well, well, prisoner, that will do for you," said Davidge.

Guiteau was apparently satisfied, and nodded with a smile, saying: "That's all right, Judge; I have had my say on Beecher. I'm satisfied."

The next witness was Senator John A. Logan, of Illinois. As he was sworn the prisoner greeted him with, "How are you, Mr. Senator? I am glad to see you." But the greeting met no response.

The witness detailed two interviews he had with the prisoner who desired his recommendation for the Consulship at Paris, which witness declined to give and got rid of him as soon as he could. He was rather peculiarly clad for the season, there being snow on the street at the time. He had on his feet a pair of sandals, or rubbers, or something of that kind. He had no stockings. He wore a pair of light pantaloons, and a common, ordinary coat. In witness, opinion, at the time, there was some derangement of Guiteau's mental organization, but to what extent he could not say.

Mrs. Scoville, the assassin's sister then took the stand and gave a biographical sketch of Guiteau's life. She had long ago made up her mind that he was crazy. As far back as 1875 she noticed a great change in his personal appearance. He was also very hard to get along with, and used to get in a "hifalutin" state. He seemed willing to do anything he was told, but got very much befogged, and could not do it. She related the incident of his attacking her with an ax. She had given him no provocation, but had got out of patience with him. It was not the ax that frightened her so much as it was the look of his face. He looked like a wild criminal.

action of Scoville made it impossible for him to assist in the defense any longer. He had put up with Scoville's insults as long as he could, and now asked to be relieved, which request was granted by the judge. Guiteau rather objected to this, and in a short speech said:

"I am here representing the Deity. He has taken good care of me thus far and I am willing to trust him.

Surgeon-general Barnes was called. He said he had been in attendance until Sept. 7, and was also in attendance at the autopsy. The wound was mortal from the first, and was the cause of the death of the president. Dr. Woodward was then called. He also was present at the autopsy. In his opinion the president's wound was mortal from the first, and same idea was expressed by Dr. Lamb, who made the autopsy, and he also said that he had never heard of such a wound proving otherwise than fatal. Mr. Scoville asked the gentlemen no questions.

Col. Corkhill said there were only two points remaining—one was that Elberon was in Monmouth county, New Jersey, and the depot where the shooting took place was on ground belonging to the United States government. Mr. Scoville admitted these points as facts in the case. Col. Corkhill then said: "Your honor, the government rests."

At the request of Mr. Scoville the prisoner was here given permission to address the jury. Guiteau began to talk as he sat in his chair. Mr. Scoville asked him to rise. "Thank you, I don't care to stand up," said Guiteau. "I am not bound to, however, but I have only a moment to talk. I did not expect to be asked to make a speech to-day. I have no set speech prepared, and I don't care to make one. I have one word to say, however, in regard to misjudgment. I only want to have shown that I am not insane. HOLIDAY SUPPLEMENT.

VOL. XXXII.—NO 28. TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY EVENING DECMBER 1, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1617.

OUR HOLIDAY SUPPLEMENT.

The best index to the prosperity and enterprise of any community is to be found in the patronage which its merchants and business men bestow upon their local newspaper. A newspaper well filled with advertising always indicates a live town. The HERALD is not given to boasting, but we can assert without fear of contradiction that Tecumseh will compare favorably with any other town of her size in the state in theadvertising patronage which her local press has always enjoyed. Not only,however, does liberal advertising indicate liberality on the part of the business community, but it denotes solid prosperity as well. Merchants who are doing a losing business cannot afford to advertise, even if they are so inclined. But if they are liberal-minded and flush in pocket they proclaim the fact through the columns of the newspaper, and the people reciprocate by giving them an increased trade. In the early autumn the merchants of Tecumseh were feeling rather dubious about securing a large fall trade. The Butler road has given an impetus to Adrian, and has started two stations east of us. The weather has also been very unpropitious. But notwithstanding these draw backs the fall trade of Tecumseh has been larger than ever before, prior to the first of December.—No one has done less business than he did one year ago, and many of our merchants have increased their trade in a remarkable ratio. With good weather during the month of December Tecumseh's trade for the autumn of 1881 will be unprecedented in the annals of her business history.

We take pleasure therefore,not for ourselves alone, but also in behalf of the business community which we represent, in presenting to our readers this week the first number of our Holiday Supplement. The HERALD of to-day, with twelve pages, of six columns each, is the largest newspaper ever issued from a Tecumseh printing office, and we doubt whether it has ever been excelled in the county. And the edition is not for one week only; it will be repeated upon each publication day in the month of December.

We respectfully invite people's attention to the announcements contained in this supplement. If you wish to know where you can buy the best goods at the lowest prices, read to-day's HERALD and ascertain. Herein you will find everything advertised that a man, woman or child wants to eat,drink or wear. If you want a paper of pins or a coal stove, a pair of boots or a gimlet, a diamond ring or a box of pills, a new dress or a can of oysters, a bed-room set or a jumping jack, a calico gown or a carpet, a tooth-pick or a potato digger, a ton of coal or a tin rattle box, a pack of cards or a peck of beans, a gold watch or a reaping machine, a seal-skin cap or a stick of gum, a sewing machine or a boot-jack, an eight-day clock or a single harness, a loaf of bread or a frying pan, a pound of potatoes or an ounce of butter, a new shirt or a mustard plaster, a rubber coat or a pitch fork, a lady's hat or a pair of tongs, a fat turkey or a chunk of cheese, a handkerchief or a force pump, a doll-baby or a dictionary, a pocket-book or a pair of skates, a cane or a collar, a bushel of turnips or a revised new testament, a sack of flour or a pair of socks, a lap-robe or a fiddle, a pig or a piano, a muffler or a bird cage, an onion or an orange, a ham or a halter, a gold pen or a gridiron, a churn or a corset, a cutter or a castor, a mutton chop or a mouse trap, a cake of soap or a string of sausage, a silk dress or a snow shoe; if you want any of these things, read this week's HERALD and find out where to go to buy them.

Christmas is coming, and all the members of the family must have a present at that time. Grandfather and grandmother will be best suited with some useful article of clothing, father and mother should have some little memento from the children,the sons and daughters will receive articles of a more costly character, combining the ornamental with the useful, and even baby will not be forgotten in the distribution of christmas gifts.

The practical question is: Where shall we buy? The columns of the HERALD furnish a reply. Our merchants were never supplied with better holiday stocks of goods and their prices were never as reasonable as now. They have large stocks, and fine stores to display them in, they know how to buy to the best advantage and hence they can sell at correspondingly low prices. To the groom and the bride we say, come; to him that heareth we say, come; to him who is athirst for Santa Claus we say, come; and whosoever will, let him come and purchase his christmas gifts freely.

A Word to Students.

From Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms.

It should be the aim of the student to be punctual in attendance at school, to be thorough in study, and good in the recitation. The boy or girl who would be successful in after life must lay the foundation of success in youth. They should fully understand the importance of improving their schooldays for this purpose.

The student that seeks every opportunity to idle away his time in making sport for himself and fellow-students, will live to regret that he thus wasted his time. The happy, sportive, joyous, laughing boy or girl shed happiness wherever they go, if they are careful to control their gayety, and allow its flow only in the proper place; but they should never permit the love of the mirthful to infringe on the rules of the school-room or the laws of etiquette. On the contrary, true courtesy should teach them to use every endeavor to aid the teacher in his work, as in so doing they themselves will reap the benefit.

The boy or girl at school foretell the future man or woman. Those who are prompt, punctual and orderly, will be so in after life. Those who are truthful, reliable, and honest in childhood, will be trusted in position and place in after years; and those who store the mind in youth with valuable knowledge will possess that which can never be lost, but on the contrary will always be a means by which they may procure a livelihood; and, if united with energy and perseverance, will be sure to give them reputation, eminence of position, and wealth.

The boy should never take a pride in disobedience to the rules of the school.

To be a truant, to be indolent, to be working mischief, evinces no talent; any rowdy could do this; most worthless men did this when they attended school. It requires effort to be a good scholar; it evinces brain power to be a good student.

The youth should earnestly resolve to achieve an honorable and noble position in life. With the wide opportunities which open to the ambitious and the enterprising in this age of progression, there is no limit to the greatness which the thoroughly earnest student may attain. The idle and the dissolute will naturally, of their own weight, drop out by the wayside and sink from sight. The plodder who is content with the dull, daily round in the same narrow rut will get the reward of his labor, though he never betters his condition. But the earnest, original, aspiring, energetic, intelligent worker, can always be sure of new fields to enter, nobler victories to gain, and grander work to accomplish.

Qualification of Voters.

A voter must be a male citizen of the United States and have attained the age of twenty-one years.

A citizen of the United States is one born of parents who are citizens of, or one who has been made a citizen by the legal process of naturalization.

All aliens coming to live in the United States, after reaching the age of eighteen years, can only be naturalized by personal application to the constituted authority.

All aliens, whose fathers are naturalized before they reach the age of eighteen years, are naturalized by the naturalization of their fathers.

All aliens who make application for certificates of citizenship, commonly called the "final papers," must prove that five years before, they made the declaration before a court of record of their intention to become a citizen of the United States. They must also prove by two witnesses that for five years next preceding their application they have lived continously in the United States and maintained good moral characters. Provided, that aliens who came to the United States prior to reaching the age of eighteen years, are not required to make the declaration of intentions. They must, however, prove five years, continuous residence, as in the case of other persons.

A voter must have had a residence in the State one year, in the county ninety days, and in the election district thirty days immediately preceding the day of election. At all general elections, he must also have his name inserted in the register of votes made by the judges of election. This may be done prior to the day of election by the election officers, of their own motion and from their own knowledge or on the personal application of the voter who shall claim and prove his right to vote. It may also be done on the day of election by the voter presenting his affidavit, substantiated by the affidavits of two registered voters of the election district, who personally know him to possess all the qualifications required of voters, stating that he is entitled to vote.

All voters whose right to vote is challanged, whether their names are upon the register or not, must prove by two qualified voters of the election district, to the satisfaction of the judges, that they possess all qualifications of voters.

Dangerous Companions.

When a young man has made up his mind to walk on the edge of a precipice for the sake of seeking prospects, he always finds plenty of company. There are abundance of people with strong heads, who, having walked these paths until they are quite certain of their foot hold, are ready to go out with new beginners. If they accidentally lose their heads and fall over, whose fault is that? Not theirs, of course. They never fall. They look where they step, and their heads do not turn. It is not drunkards and thieves who are dangerous companions to the green boys just in from the country. Oh, dear, no! It is your respectable young men that have learned to sip discreetly in all sorts of forbidden fountains, and nibble here and there carefully of the forbidden fruit. They are held as a pattern. They drink, but are never drunk. They have exactly the knack of seeing and knowing all that is to be known in the ways of wickedness, and yet keeping every step with the righteous. Some of them are church members and Sunday school teachers. Some are regular shrewd business men. They are never going to hurt themselves, they tell you, but they believe in a certain freedom. They never could see the sense of temperance pledges. For their part they don't need them, and if there is anything they abominate it is your radical, straight-laced people, who keep always in the dusty turnpike for fear of the precipice.

Child of seven, before being brought into the drawing-room. Row heard outside room. Scream from child. Child in alto: "Tompany [company] or no tompany, I won't have my face washed with spit."

The Alhambra.

On a hill in the city of Granada, a principal town in the Spanish province of Andalusia, stands an extensive fortress known as the Alhambra, or "The Red Castle." It is the old citadel of the town, and was built by the Moors when they were the masters of Spain. Designed for warlike and defensive purposes only, it has no pretension to architectural grandeur or effect. Its walls, which average thirty feet in height and six feet in thickness, are irregular in form, and composed chiefly of loose stones cemented together, and faced with a plaster coat. The area enclosed by this fortress is very extensive. It is like a town in itself, having its streets, its church, and convent; and is said in its palmy days to have afforded accomodation to a garrison of 40,000 men.

Plain and rugged as is this structure in external appearance, it is the casket which holds one of the richest gems of the architecture of any age or time. Within its walls are enclosed the remains of the Moorish palace to which the name of "the Alhambra" is generally applied, although it belong properly to the fortress itself. This palace was built in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and all the beauty and ingenuity of Arabic art were lavished upon its construction. Upon the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, it occasionally became the residence of the Christian sovereigns, and Charles V. designed to place by its side another palace, which should eclipse the glories of the art of the infidel Moor. But this building, though it was commenced, and some very fine portions of it are still in existence, was never completed. Its fragments were suffered to decay when Granada grew in disfavor as a residence with the Spanish monarchs, and, when compared with the remains of the Moorish palace, they now show to great disadvantage; the contrast between the two styles of art and the nature of the workmanship in each is greatly in favor of the Moors. "The walls of the Christian edifice," says one writer, "are defaced, the paintings faded, the woodwork is decayed, and festoons of cobwebs are seen hanging from the ceiling. In the works of the Arabs, on the contrary, the walls remained unaltered, except by the injuries inflicted by the hand of man. The color of the paintings, in which there is no mixture of oil, on removing the particles of dust, appear to have preserved their brightness. The beams and wood-work of the ceilings present no signs of decay; no spiders, flies, or other insects are to be seen there. The art of rendering timber and paints durable, and of making porcelain mosaics, arabesques, and other ornaments, began and ended in Western Europe with the Moorish conquerors of Spain."

The remains of the palace of the Alhambra consist of entrance-arches, corridors, and courts, constructed chiefly of marble, and richly adorned with arabesques. The Arabs were forbidden by their religion to use the representation of living figures or animals in their ornamental devices, which therefore took the shape of flowers and geometrical forms, sometimes very fanciful in their nature. The term arabesque was applied to this class of ornament, after the race by which it was chiefly used. These arabesque ornaments were cast in moulds, and joined with such extreme nicety that frequently no trace of the point of junction can be detected. They were colored in blue, red, and gold, and the general effect in such edifices as the Alhambra is so gorgeous that it cannot be realised by description. An excellent idea of it, however, was given by the Alhambra Court in in the Crystal Palace at Sydenham, which was a most artistic imitation of the original, both in style and material, although on a smaller scale.

The many courts and corridors, of the Alhambra were very elaborately decorated, the saloon known as the Hall of Abencerrages, with its beautiful stalacite roof, being composed of 5,000 separate pieces fitting into each other with the greatest exactitude. The hall takes its name from a Moorish family, the last members of whicl were treacherously murdered in this chamber. A mark, said to have been left by their blood, is pointed out upon the marble floor; but sceptical people in later times have declared that it is nothing but the deposit of water in pregnated with iron.

Dogs and How to take Care of Them.

The best way to keep a dog healthy is to let him have plenty of exercise, and not to over-feed him. Let them at all times have a plentiful supply of clean water, and encourage them to take to swimming, as it assists their cleanliness. When you wash them, do not use a particle of soap, or you will prevent their licking themselves, and they may become habitually dirty. Properly treated, dogs should be fed only once a day. Meat boiled for dogs, and the liquor in which it is boiled thickened with barley meal, or oatmeal, forms capital food. The distemper is liable to attack dogs from four months to four years old. It prevails most in spring and autumn. The disease is known by dullness of the eye, husky cough, shivering, loss of appetite and spirits, and fits. When fits occur, the dog will most likely die, unless a veterinary surgeon is called in. During the distemper, dogs should be allowed to run on the grass; their diet should be spare; and a little sulphur be placed in their water. Chemists who dispense cattle medicines can generally advise with sufficient safety upon the diseases of dogs, and it is best for unskilful persons to abstain from physicking them. Hydrophobia is the most dreadful of all diseases. The first symptoms are attended by thirst, fever, and languor. The dog starts convulsively in his sleep, and when awake, though restless, is languid. When a dog is suspected, he should be firmly chained in a place here neither children nor dogs or cats can get near him. Any one going to attend him should wear thick leather gloves, and proceed with great caution. When a dog snaps savagely at an imaginary object, it is almost a certain indication of madness; and when it exhibts a terror of fluids, it is confirmed hydrophobia. Some dogs exhibit a great dislike of musical sounds, and when this is the case they are too frequently made sport of. But is a dangerous sport, as dogs have sometimes been made mad by it. In many diseases dogs will be benefited by warm baths. The mange is a contagious disease, which is difficult to get rid of when once contracted. The way is to apply to a veterinay chemist for an ointment, and to keep applying it for some time after the disease has disappeared, or it will break out again.

People often complain of hard times from a natural tendency to growl, but a Georga darkey the other day said: "Nebber seed such times since I was born. Work all day and steal all night, and blessid if I can hardly make a libbin."

BROOKLYN.

Brooklyn is becoming a very solemn place, if solemnization of marriages can affect its cheerfulness.—There has been three weddings on this street the past week. Other avenues have been similarly afflicted, and some one or two more vaccinated with the epidemic will follow suit if the condition remain favorable.

If there is a live agent for "Guide to Women," it is a good time for him to come here. The few who are preparing wedding garments are smothered with plain sewing, and need spiritual pilotage through the social whirlpool. Not to be, or not going to be married brands the unappreciated bachelors and maidens of this much tied community with a spottedness Cain never dreamed of, and banishes them to the further corner of society's extreme outness. Of course this state of things can't help producing pink-tinged distraction among the exiles, and they are consoling themselves with the ill-natured reflection that those other parties have bargained for another kind that comes later and for which even the famous balm cultivated in Gilead is not always a remedy. Perhaps its power is becoming exhausted by merciless requisition, and in case it fails entirely why not try the new iron-clad enactment, that has proved such a soothing cordial to my temperance friends. I found time for a first reading of it to-day, and it is really the amazingest restraintment on humanity's prediction for doing things they oughtn't that I ever studied.

On account of a liberal sprinkling of Ifs I prefer it to the ten commandments, and containing as it does the condensed elements of the eleventh it deserves to be incorporated in the marriage ceremony. A copy of it grafted into the accompanying certificate would annihilate the thousand and one convictions that come to a girl so naturally as soon as she is Mrs. and furnish more chances of escape from all moral responsibility than the Old Harry can afford to patent.

No doubt our legislature meant well when they made themselves grandfather to the Iron Clad, but I guess their heads had become oppressed with enactment and amendment of the billiard dining room in the basement or possibly they were worried to death about those horrid mormons. Whatever the cause they developed a mighty crack in theoretical soundness when they tied druggists with an air line. Druggists are not angels, though I wish some of them were, and that open book they are keeping is too cute for anything.

Perhaps that legislative grand-pere never thought the pas and mas would send their little children to the druggist with written orders for pints or half-pints of medicine consisting wholly or in part of intoxicating liquor. But then they do real often.—Now the same kind of medicine is kept at saloons, without the book attachment. What if the little folks should make a mistake. It would fuddle the whole concern. Then again. The tipsy testimony is not altogether reliable, and produces a halting between two opinions, and leaves room for all those little Ifs.

I expect those poor overtasked servants of this state intended to mould an immense fissure between tweedle and twaddle, and some regard their effort with great expectations. But, notwithstanding all this fuss and scare, it looks as if Jimmy said Jack did, and Jack said not so, and the children forget where their parents said go, on account of the spanking pressure, and druggists' books wear a blankish look to curious investigators. That tipsy Jimmy and much taxed Jack might chink this great iron-clad temperance crack that was built by our legislature. The main trouble seems to lurk in those amendments.—All it lacks is an apatchment. They have not labored in vain, however, for if it is not worth a cent for a cage it is a splendid pinafore.

PEARLIE.

ADDISON.

We are pleased to note the fact that Mr. E. S. Lapham, whose illness we noticed in the HERALD a few weeks' since, is again able to appear on the street.

A pound social for the benefit of Rev. Duke Whiteley is on the program of public gatherings at the M. E. church this week. "Whosoever will may come."

Our old friend John A. Williams is about to open a shoe shop on the west side of the creek.

Mr. E. D. Bullen is about going to Detroit to spend the winter. He is well known in that city, also in London, Canada.

WILL MCCOWEN has left at our office a photograph entitled "Breaking Prairie in Kansas." It shows a farmer holding a plow, and the latter drawn by a mammoth grasshopper.—Will, himself, designed and executed the picture, and it shows considerable artistical talent.

REMEMBER the election of officers of the Masonic Lodge will take place to-morrow evening.

HOLIDAY SUPPLEMENT.

VOL. XXXII.---NO. 28. TECUMSEH, MICHIGAN, THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 1, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1617.

Mystery of Exchange.

Most of our readers are aware that the quotation of foreign exchange represents a premium considerably in excess of the actual fact; but we doubt whether all of them know precisely what is the difference. By the usage of the bankers, the old Spanish dollar is set the par of exchange, one pound sterling being equal to four and four-ninths of these dollars. In point of fact, however, in the established moneys of Great Britain and the United States, a pound sterling contains as much gold as $4.87 of United States money; and this is the true par of exchange or rate which must be used in converting the money of one country into that of the other. For instance: if anything costs £100 in Great Britain, its true value expressed in the money of the United States is $487. Accordingly, it is a fact familiar to all bankers, that when exchange is quoted at 109 1-2, there is no real premium, but the true par has been attained; because if we multiply 4.44 4-9, which is the nominal par, by 109 4-2, which is then the quoted rate, we get $4.87, which is the true par. We need scarcely add that it is owing to this circumstance that the exports of gold from the United States are not larger. If there really existed such a heavy premium on bills of exchange as many people suppose, it would be immensely profitable to export gold to Great Britain. In point of fact, in view of the necessary expenses of freight, insurance and loss of interest, the margin does not more than cover the risk. The United States half-eagle, it may be added, contains 116 grains of pure gold, equivalent to $5, the British sovereign, or pound sterling, 113 grains, equivalent to $4.87 of the United States money.

Housekeeping.

Every woman owes it to her family, as well as to herself, to simplify her work as much as possible, and not to do things that are unnecessary; for instance, it is a waste of time, strength and blacking to black and polish the top of a kitchen stove after each meal is prepared. Of course other parts of the stove can be kept nice with little trouble, and if the top is kept clean until the fire is out for the day, that ought to satisfy the most painstaking woman. A convenient arrangement for washing the top of a hot stove is to have a smooth, round stick with a soft cloth securely tied to it. A cloth is much better than a brush for cleaning corners.

An old housekeeper, and a wise woman, said to me once that after twenty-five years of hard work in the kitchen and parlor, she had come to the conclusion that although it might cause a revolution in the civilized world she would never put another zinc under her sitting room stove. She amplified her statement, saying: "The time I have spent on my knees scouring that zinc, if otherwise employed, would have made me a well-read woman, or if devoted to my children would have been of great benefit to them and comfort to me." Her words seemed to me to have great force in them, and the result was that my own stove was put up without the customary zinc. Certain members of the family who prophesied the destruction of the house by fire were surprised to find that we were just as well off without it. A heavy oilcloth with newspapers under it was put under the stove, and although it is a base-burner, and we kept a large room warm with it, the experiment was a success. The oilcloth is easily taken care of. Wash it with warm suds, then with warm milk and water, drying with a soft cloth.

His Welcome from the Old Folks.

Ex-Governor Duvall, Florida, was the son of a poor Virginian, a stern, strong, taciturn man. The boy was a huge youth of fifteen. At the cabin fire at bed-time, according to the custom of putting on a back-log, the old man said, between the whiffs of his silent pipe: "Tab, go out and bring in that gum back-log, and put it on the fire." Tab went out and surveyed the log. He knew that it was no use explaining that it was too heavy, nor prudent for him to return without having it upon his shoulder. His little sister, passing, was not surprised that he requested her to bring out the gun and powder-horn, as a 'possum or coon might have passed, or the brother might have seen bear signs. She brought the gun and Tab started. He found the way through the woods into Kentucky in 1791. After an absence of eighteen years he was elected to Congress. A man of immense size and strength, he started for Washington, going by the way of his old home to see the folks, who had long since given him up for dead. Entering the little cabin yard near bed-time, he saw the identical gum-log. He shouldered it, pulled the latchstring and with his load stood before the old man, pipe in mouth as usual. "Here is the gum log, father." "Well, you've been a long while getting it; put it on the fire and go to bed." —Florida Union.

Many believe that a real diamond will resist the blow of a hammer. This popular error arises from confounding hardness with toughness—two physical properties which are entirely distinct. A piece of gutta percha, for example, is so tough that it is torn asunder with difficulty, yet so soft that it may be indented with the finger-nail. On the other hand, the diamond is so hard that no other substance is capable of scratching it, yet so brittle that the "Regent" itself might be shattered into fragments by dropping it on the ground from the height of only a few feet.

IN THE STREET.—A gentleman interested in prisoners visited a man in jail, waiting to be tried for a crime.

"Sir," said the prisoner, tears running down his cheeks, "I had a good home education. My street education ruined me. I used to slip out of the house, and go off with the boys in the street.

"In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; in the street I learned to pilfer, and to do all evil. O sir, it is in the street the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young!"

Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

THIS is a good week for shows.

THE roads are improving very rapidly.

CHARLIE BENEWAY is happy, for he is the father of a fine boy.

BOYS, please remember that the new ordinance goes into effect to-day.

Now grease the griddle, for the season of buckwheat cakes has arrived.

MISS TILLA FINZEL, of Monroe, is the guest of Miss Lizzie Smith this week.

THE tax gatherer will soon open his receipt book and call for more stamps.

DELOS WHITENACK's new house on Pottawatamie street is progressing rapidly.

C. D. BILLS and H. H. Snell took their Thanksgiving turkey with their Tecumseh friends.

MAGGIE MITCHELL will appear at Adrian next Monday evening in the "Pearl of Savoy."

COL. DREW has leased the Wheeler house in Blissfield, and will take possession very soon.

UNCLE TOM is coming. Well, it is a good thing to have Uncle Tom 'come around once in a while.

WE regret to learn that Miss Josie Colvin, of Raisin, is very sick with an attack of malarial fever.

MR. A. J. PALMER is slowly recovering from the injury he received by his fall some two weeks since.

FRANK DEPUY has been "down" with the fever, but we see his smiling countenance again on the streets.

FRANK W. SEVERN, of the Detroit Medical College, was in town over Sunday, the guest of H. W. Catlin.

THE ladies of Adrian are talking of starting a Dickens' Club. We should think the ladies raised the dickens enough already.

CLEM BRAMBLE makes a first-class post office clerk. Postmaster Tribou seems to be very fortunate in securing good assistants.

LAST Saturday was a tremendous day for trade in Tecumseh. Everybody came to town and brought along their uncles, and cousins and aunts.

MR. AND MRS. E. G. COOK, of Clinton, have gone east for a few weeks' visit. Mr. Cook says this is the first respite from business that he has taken in over twenty years.

MR. & MRS. A. HANFORD have returned from their wedding trip to Colorado. They enjoyed their journey very much and had a pleasant visit at Mrs. Blackman's and with other old Tecumseh acquaintances.

GOODRICH & STACY have put up a telephone between the HERALD office and their box factory in Temple's planing mill. It works like a charm, and the HERALD boys, while partaking of their noon lunch, can hear Goodrich sing the doxology.

WE ate roast turkey last Thursday at Sink's hotel. The turkey was tender, the cooking was prime, the dressing well seasoned, the cranberry sauce superb, the et ceteras were served up in apple pie order. We never enjoyed a Thanksgiving turkey better.

MR. H. EGABROAD, of the Dundee Reporter, was in town last Monday on business and favored us with a call. He has just been entering upon a second newspaper venture at Coldwater, having purchased an entire new outfit for a paper to be conducted by his son in that city.

THE dramatic entertainment on Thursday evening last, at the Opera House, was decidedly good. The "Coming Woman" was finely portrayed. Perry Hosmer is always at home on the stage, and the support was very creditable indeed. We have seen poorer acting by professional companies.

WE call the attention of our patrons to the magnificent assortment of Christmas Cards which we have placed on sale at the HERALD Counting Room. The best houses of Detroit, Chicago and Philadelphia have contributed to our stock. We have over 200 different patterns on hand. Please call and examine them.

WILL MCCOWEN is home again for a short visit. He left Tecumseh nearly five years ago, and has been in Kansas since that time. He finds many improvements in Tecumseh that have taken place during the past five years. But the droughts and grasshoppers of Kansas do not seem to have changed him a particle.

THE Blissfield Advance bubbles over with enthusiasm at the prospect of having gas from their newly discovered gas well. It pictures to itself a young city, plenty of business, a daily paper, and all the other accessories of a big city. Our cotemporary may be a little over-enthusiastic, but if the gas well shall be a success it will be a grand thing for Blissfield. There is no question about that.

STEWART concert at the Opera House to-morrow evening.

THE Ladies' St. Peter's church social at Mrs. W. J. Kies', next Thursday evening.

H. G. SHERRARD was at home Thanksgiving day. Harry is quite a stranger on our streets of late.

A. W. SLAYTON has been confined to his house for about ten day with malarial fever, but is now getting around again.

DR. E. BUCKLEY and family, of Buffalo, N. Y., has moved to our village with the intention of making Tecumseh their home. Mr. B. is a doctor of the homeopathic school and comes with good recommendations.

DR. HAUSE has just received a heavy invoice of Christmas candy and candy toys suitable for the holidays. He has over 100 varieties of candy on his shelves, which is the finest assortment even seen in this village.

WE understand that Richard Caldwell will sell his stock of furniture at auction in a short time. This will be a good chance for people to buy some good furniture at low rates, as the stock will be closed out. Notice of date next week.

THE Lansing common council has passed an ordinance requiring all wood brought to that market to be sold by the cord at a stated price, the seller to pile the wood for measurement. The penalty for the violation of this ordinance is $10 fine or ten days in jail.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will not be absent next Sabbath, as he expected to be, but will preach in the morning as usual, and in the evening will preach, as previously announced, on "The use of profane language and kindred vices."

THE ladies of St. Peter's church social desire to express to the public generally thanks for the liberal patronage received at the late fair and entertainment, and especially to the five young gentlemen who so generously presented them with the sum of twenty-five dollars.

AT the Universalist church a series of discourses on gospel and popular religious subjects every Sunday evening. By request next Sunday evening the pastor will repeat the sermon from the text, And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. St. John 12:32.

HORACE BREWER, Esq. has been in feeble health for several weeks and last week he became rapidly worse.—His symptoms are better at present, although his condition is still very critical. It is to be hoped he may recover. The loss of such a business man as Horace Brewer would be a serious calamity to the community.

On Saturday, Dec. 17th, 1881, S. C. Stacy will sell the House and Lot known as the George C. Monaghan property, situated near the East Branch school in the village of Tecumseh. The lot is twelve rods square with large two story house and comfortable barn thereon, a beautiful yard well fenced, a good well and two cisterns. The lot can be divided into two lots of six by twelve rods each, with house on one and barn on the other, and will be sold all together or in two parcels, as will net most to the seller. As this property belongs to an estate and MUST BE SOLD, it will afford a splendid chance for some one to buy a good home very cheap. Sale will begin at one o'clock P. M. on the premises. Terms made known at and before sale. Ben Reynolds, auctioneer.

A FIRE.

Last night about 10 o'clock a bright light in the direction of Hayden's mill was seen. John Smyth rang the fire bell, somebody yelled fire and in less than five minutes the whole town was out to see what was the matter. The fire proved to be Hayden's stave shed and barn south of the stave factory. The roads were very muddy and before the engine could be hauled down by hand the barn and shed were past saving, but the boys did good work, preventing further damages from the fire spreading to the other shed and surrounding buildings. The greatest loss was the team and harness which were burned in the barn. The cause of the fire is not known, but was probably accidental. The way the fire turned out, the loss was very slight, but suppose it had caught in Hayden's mill instead of the barn, the whole property would have been consumed before it would have been possible for any number of men to have pulled that engine down there. As the corporation is constantly hiring team work on the streets, which a fire department team could do as well, would it not be a good plan for our city fathers to make some arrangement whereby the engine would be of some practical use in case of a fire.—Now, if the fire is more than two blocks away from the engine house and the roads are at all muddy you might about as well kneel down and pray for a flood as to get the fire engine at work before the fire has exhausted itself.

CULTIVATION OF SORGHUM.

Sorghum has been cultivated in the United States to a considerable extent for the last twenty years. Many have failed to receive from it remuneration for their labor, and still it has been fully demonstrated that with proper cultivation and care in harvesting a good article of syrup can be made from it, which in its quantity and quality will make sorghum a paying crop.

Farming is successful only so far as it is intelligently practiced. We must know the adaptation of the crops we cultivate to the soil. We must understand the best methods of cultivation, and after the crop has matured we must know when and how to harvest and secure it, so as to realize the profit which we seek in all our agricultural pursuits.

The cultivation of sorghum is in no sense different from any other crop, from the fact that to raise it with success we must use the good sense and intelligence which every farmer is supposed to have, or ought to have, or we fail to get pay for our labor. Sorghum ground should not be enriched with barn yard manure which is not thoroughly decomposed. Many have failed to get a good article of syrup because they have not observed this rule. The plant will take from the soil ingredients which will spoil the syrup if it grows while the manure is in a state of decomposition.

Much care is necessary in handling sorghum after it is cut. It is often the practice to cut and throw into heaps on the ground, and let it remain there till it is worked up regardless of the weather. In a dry time, with proper protection from the sun, this plan may do, but in such a season as last fall it is sure to fail. The surer way is to harvest before frost, in bundles and set up in a barn or shed, and then it must be set up in such a way as to allow a free circulation of air through it. In this way it may be kept till Christmas without loss, but rather will profit, for so properly cured always makes better syrup than it does when first harvested.

It is not fair for a farmer to hand his cane in a careless or slovenly manner, bring it to the mill in a half rotten condition, and then blame the manufacturer because he does not get good syrup. Cook's evaporator has been more successfully used in the manufacture of syrup from sorghum than any other apparatus. The best operators in this state have used it, and are uniform in recommending it to others. Among these are J. T. Weeks, L. D. Badwell, H. Bailey, D. D. Keab, J. L. Tallman, A. K. Waldron, and Ely Winnie, who by the way took all the premiums at the last Sorghum Convention.

Early varieties of cane are not always the best, especially if they mature so early as to be harvested in very hot weather. Cane is better to be a little green when cut than to be past maturity.

There are no better varieties of cane than the Sorgho and Otaheitan, and with these the seed should be often changed and replaced by seed from a warmer climate, for as the cane becomes acclimated it deteriorates much in quantity of sacharine matter. Let no one be discouraged in the cultivation of sorghum. Exercise as much care as is necessary to raise successfully wheat, oats, corn and potatoes and you will be well paid for your labor, and be able to furnish your table with an almost indispensable luxury.

A SUCCESSFUL SORGHUM GROWER.

Adrian Times, Nov. 28: Last evening about eight o'clock, a horrible accident occurred in the Lake Shore yards at Riga. A young man named Miller, whose home is two or three miles south of the village, was run over by a part of freight train No. 50, going east, and both legs cut off between the knees and ankle. He had boarded the train at Blissfield and had stolen a ride to Riga. When the latter place was reached, he was discovered between two box cars by a brakeman who ordered him to get off the train, in doing which he fell between the moving cars with the result stated above. The unfortunate man was conveyed to the hotel near by, the proper surgical aid summoned, and some hopes of his life are entertained.

Reform Club Social.

The regular monthly social will be held at their hall on Monday evening next. The public are cordially invited to attend. The exercises will consist of singing, readings, recitations, address, &c. Free admission, no collection.

MR. AND MRS. W. H. MATHER.

FRANK BAXTER was home one day this week. He is now acting as Supt. of Agencies for the Accident Insurance Co. of North America. His territory is limited to the State of Michigan at present.

A Leading Professor Speaking of Sensible People.

Dr. S. the prominent Eastern medical lecturer, says: "Every day sensible people come to me complaining of their health being broke down. The answers to my enquiries always are—what I surmise—nature's laws have been totally disregarded; consequently the blood, the stream of life, becomes contaminated—and as a result of this blood poisoning I find dyspepsia and disordered functions of heart, lungs, liver and kidneys, accompanied by headache, nervous debility, and other impaired organic portions, often verging on paralysis. In order to keep the digestive organs in proper health and strength, I and my friends in the profession have recommended the use of Brown's Iron Bitters—they act so mildly and soothingly, never leaving any unpleasant after effects, strengthening the organs of digestion, and permanently removing every symptom of ill health, languor and debility. No remedy in the East gives such good satisfaction as Brown's Iron Bitters, and all druggists can procure it for you. Don't be persuaded to use a substitute. This remedy contains no alcohol and is the only preparation of Iron that does not blacken the teeth.—Sun.

An Enigma.

It is so cheap that everybody can get it.

No household is complete without it.

We all want it.

It is enjoyed fully by the old and the young.

It is found in every clime, and there is only one in the world.

What is it?

Answer: It is the Detroit Free Press, more copied from than any paper ever printed. Price $1,50 a year. We will send the Tecumseh HERALD and The Free Press, both, to the same or separate addresses, one year for $2.60 cash in advance. Send in if you want the best literature at the lowest rates.

Dr. Kennedy

would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of Surgery. Parties living at a distance, except in surgical cases, by sending a statement of their case, can be treated at home. Address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

An exchange says: "If a lamp chimney be cut with a diamond on the convex side, it will never crack with heat, as the incision affords room for expansion, and the glass, after cooling, returns to its original shape, with only a scratch visible where the cut was made." If some one will furnish us with a diamond we will try this; we have the lamp chimney.

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorses Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only reliable remedy in the market. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways.

A Woman's Experience.

Mothers and daughters should feel alarmed when weariness constantly oppresses them. "If I am fretful from exhaustion of vital powers, and the color is fading from my face, Parker's Ginger Tonic, gives quick relief. It builds me up and drives away pain and wonderful certainty."—Buffalo lady.

Elegance and Purity.

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color, beauty and lustre.

England and Ireland are sending potatoes to New York, and beans are arriving at the same city from Germany.

Everybody is using Brown's Iron Bitters, and everybody is astonished at its many marvelous cures where all others have failed.

One of the new buildings just erected for the reform school for girls at Adrian, is to be called "Waldby Cottage."

Morenci Observer: We hear a good deal of complaint among teachers who reside in the outer towns of the county, about being compelled to go to the county seat for examination, a distance of 15 to 25 miles, subjecting them to a hard day's travel and from $2 to $3 expenses. The new system surely has some inconvenient features about it which should be modified by the next legislature.

Under the new census Michigan will gain one congressman, but it is unlikely this district will be changed.

THE plow factory at Monroe is up to the second story. Two weeks of good weather will see the bricks laid. The factory is to be 36x170 feet and three stories high.

IT is noteworthy that the city of New York has contributed to the Michigan relief fund almost as much as the entire State of Michigan. How much has Chicago contributed?

Deerfield Record: Gearheart Logue was arrested and taken to Adrian, Monday evening, charged with stealing the clock which mysteriously disappeared from the Lake Shore depot recently. His trial takes place Dec. 5th; meanwhile he is out on $200 bail.

A COUNTRY paper of Illinois says, among its local items: "No word has yet been heard from Abraham Lever, who went off two weeks ago with his wife's red-headed hired girl. Until his return his Sabbath school class will be in charge of the Rev. Mr. Perkins."

DIED.

MOORE.—In Detroit, on Sunday, Nov. 27th, of consumption, Charles Raynor, youngest son of C. James and Emma A. Moore, aged 18 mo.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Moore, residing in Tecumseh, deeply sympathize with them in their bereavement. The remains were brought to Tecumseh on Tuesday last for interment.

WILSON—November 19, 1881, at the residence of his aunt, Mrs. C. Abiderman in Tecumseh, Martin W. Wilson, aged 24 years, 4 months, and 7 days.

He was born in Franklin, Lenawee Co. He graduated from the high school of Tecumseh last June with great credit to himself and teacher. He entered the State Normal school of Ypsilanti in September, intending to complete the full course and graduate, but a divine Providence ruled otherwise. He was taken ill with typho-malarial fever which broke down his robust constitution and he laid aside all his plans and earthly hopes and submitting to the inevitable, he quietly passed away.

His funeral was largely attended at his father's residence, the services being conducted by Rev. R. S. Pardington. A brief service was also held at the Raisin Valley Friends' meeting house at which Rev. Mr. Bartlett, Prof. Fairfield and the writer officiated. He was buried in the cemetery near by. He was a solid young man, possessed with an ardent love of knowledge and an indomitable energy. His religious principles were well fixed. He had made a profession of Christianity in early life among the Friends. The family desire to express gratitude to all the friends who sought to minister to them in their bereavement.

The Age of Inventions.

The number of inventions that have been made during the past fifty years is perhaps unprecedented in the history of the world. Of course inventions of benefit to the human race have been made in all ages since man was created, but looking back for half a hundred years, how many more are crowded into the last fifty than into any other fifty since recorded history. The perfection of the locomotive and the now world-traversing steamship, the telegraph, the telephone, the audiphone, the sewing machine, the photograph, chromo lithographic printing, the cylinder printing press, the elevator for hotels and other many storied buildings, the cotton gin and the spinning jenny, the reaper and mower, the steam thresher, the steam fire-engine, the improved process for making steel, the application of chloroform and ether to destroy sensibility in painful surgery cases, and so on through a long catalogue. Nor are we yet done in the field of invention and discovery. The application of coal gas and petroleum to heating and cooking operations is only trembling on the verge of successful experiment, the introduction of steam from a great central reservoir to general use for heating and cooking is forshadowed as among the coming events, the artificial production of butter has already created consternation among dairymen, and he would be a bold man who dared predict that cheese would not next be obtained from suet or some other product of the slaughtered ox, with equal success. The navigation of the air by some device akin to our present balloon would also seem to be prefigured, and the propulsion of machinery by electricity is even now clearly indicated by the march of experiment.

There are some problems we have hitherto deemed impossible, but are the mysteries of even the most improbable of them more subtle to grasp than that of the ocean cable or that of the photograph or the telephone? We talk by cable with an ocean rolling between; we speak in our own voices to friends a hundred miles or more from where we articulate before the mechrophone. Under the blazing suns of July we produce ice by chemical means rivaling the most solid and crystalline production of nature. Our surgeons graft the skin from one person's arm to the face of another and it adheres and becomes an integral portion of his body. We make a mile of white printing paper and send it on a spool that a perfecting printing press unwinds and prints and cuts and delivers to you folded and counted, many thousand per hour. Of a verity this is the age of invention, nor has the world reached a stopping place yet.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Education of English Girls.

English girls are taught—or were in my time—by a kind of a system which tends to multiply "accomplishments" rather than useful knowledge. A certain routine of teaching is gone through, and you come out of the school-room with a society varnish intended to do duty until marriage, at which period custom allows you to dispense with surface accomplishments, and devote yourself to the realities of life, mitigated as they are for the well-to-do. On the other hand, the moral atmosphere of the English home education is superior to that of American education in general. Girls are less forward and more respectful; they grow into women more slowly and ripen better; they are physically stronger, and therefore have simpler tastes; and as to society, they do not know what it means before at the age of seventeen or eighteen. American girls have certain advantages, however, which custom denies your English women of good position; they are not forced by an unwritten law to go into society and play their part in it, while the English girl has no choice. The "upper ten thousand" must marry or become "blue-stockings" before the world agrees to let them alone. A young married woman may, if she choose, plead home duties as an excuse for a quiet, useful, pleasant and studious life, uninterrupted by any but the necessary "country" civilities, which are not very burdensome; but young girls are not supposed to have such duties. Parents, even when sick themselves, are loth to let the chances of the London season pass by their daughters, and depute any safe chaperon, the nearest female relation if possible, to take their girls to all the balls and parties. The rudimentary education furnished to women of the higher classes has perhaps something to do with the prevalence of "fastness" among a part of them, while to others it becomes the base of a real, later self-education, the growth of reading, observation, and thought.

"Opening a Chestnut Burr."

"Any chestnuts 'round here?" asked one of three city boys who met an aged, benevolent-looking farmer out in Livonia Township. The old man hesitated.

"You don't want to steal 'em?" he asked.

"Oh no, we just want to find them out."

"Well, there's a few trees back there, but I thought you wanted to steal them I wouldn't have told you, for the owner's gone to town; but you're bright, honest-looking boys."

The boys blushed with the pride of conscious goodness.

"When will the owner be back?"

"Well, not before dark, I reckon."

The boys respectfully thanked the old man, waited until he got out of sight, jumped the fence and were soon shaking down the burrs.

The shaking was easy, but the opening of the chestnut burrs was more difficult and unpleasant. At last the boys had a splendid pile of handsome, brown nuts on the ground, and they prepared to put them in the bags they brought with them.

"Please don't take any more trouble," said the benevolent old man who stood by the fence beaming kindly on the startled boys. "I'm not as strong as I once was, and I fear I can't hold in this dog much longer. If you'll hurry, though, I guess I can keep him here till you get to the railroad track. Down, Tige, sir!"

As the boys looked back from the railroad fence, they could see the stooping figure of the old man scooping the rich, brown chestnuts into a two bushel bag.—Detroit Free Press.

A second national bank has been organized at Manistee, of which R. G. Peters is president and a Mr. Burr, of New York, is cashier; $55,000 of the stock was taken in Manistee.

Some of the people at Niles who demanded what were considered exorbitant rates for right of way for the new railroad, through their property, have been beautifully left. Others gave the needed right of way, and a new survey has left the greedy ones out in the cold.

William Reynolds, of Grand Ledge, fell from the top of a two-story building to the ground floor, Tuesday afternoon, and a wheelbarrow filled with brick fell with and upon him, mangling him in a terrible manner, so that he died in two hours. He leaves a young wife.

The Hancock Mining Journal says that "the Calumet & Hecla mining company, the Detroit & Lake Superior copper company, L. The Monroe Commercial says: Jos. Guyor has sold his interest in the Monroe marshes to a club of eastern sportsmen. By this transfer the club gains control of all the marsh east of the old river bed, as well as a large part of what is known as the north marsh. The consideration is reported at $3,000.

Some one in Cass county was so good as to swear out a warrant for the arrest of a woman 89 years of age, charging her with the larceny of six potatoes. The sad lady is a resident of Vandalia and a member of the church. A microscope through which the soul of the complainant in the case might be seen would fill a long felt scientific want.

During the progress of an ejectment trial at Reading last week, in which the real parties interested were two widows, the six jurymen were aged respectively 70, 68, 66, 65, 69 and 51 years, the justice was 65 years old, the constable 70, one of the spectators was 64 and another almost 90. If age be wisdom the widows should have got a fair show in that court.

Mr. Geo. Olds, of Yuba, received a telegram from Guiteau's attorney stating that he was wanted in Washington to testify in the trial of the above wretch. Some six years ago Mr. Olds had occasion to kick the cuss out doors for insulting some members of his family, and we suppose because Guiteau is a mean devil it will be made to look as though it was insanity that caused him to act so.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

Mushroom Catsup.—Cut them all up fine, and to every pound of mushrooms add a tablespoonful of salt; put away for twenty-four hours in a cool place, and drain off the juice, using pressure; boil this juice with three cloves and half a dozen peppercorns, and let it boil slowly; strain carefully, when cold, and add to each pint of fluid a wine-glassful of sherry; must be stopped carefully; if not salt enough, add salt.

Greengage Marmalade.—When the plums are thoroughly ripe, take off the skins; weigh, and boil them quickly, without sugar, for 50 minutes, keeping them well stirred; then to every four pounds add three of good sugar reduced quite to powder; boil the preserve from five to eight minutes longer, and clear off the scum perfectly before it is poured to be put in the jars. When the flesh of the fruit will not separate easily from the stones, weigh and throw the plums whole into the preserving-pan, boil them to a pulp, pass through a sieve, and deduct the weight of the stones from them when apportioning the sugar to the jam. The Orleans plumes may be substituted for greengages in this recipe. Greengages stoned and skinned, six pounds, 50 minutes. Sugar, four and a half pounds, 5 to 9 minutes.

How to Fry Fish.—The frying of fish of any kind requires much patience in teaching an inexperienced servant, but the result is worth aiming at. There is nothing so good as clarified mutton fat for frying fish in. Lard makes the fish greasy and spoils its flavor. In frying delicate fish like smelts, etc., make an exception to the general rule. Nothing is fit for such except oil. A medium-sized bottle of the best olive oil can be purchased for twenty-five cents, and for cooking purposes it is best to open small bottles, so as to keep them fresh. A couple of wine-glasses of this will be found quite sufficient for frying these fish, enough for a party of six or eight. Let the fish be delicately cleaned, have ready some egg well whipped to a froth, drop in the fish lightly, then dip them into a plate of sifted bread crumbs, which should be beside the eggs, then throw into the boiling oil. A few minutes will be sufficient to cook them, and always have half sent up at a time, so that they may appear very hot.

Ice Cream and Ices.—Two quarts of new milk, ten eggs, one tablespoonful of cornstarch, beat the eggs, wet the cornstarch and stir it in the milk, then stir in the eggs and cook, but do not let them curdle; one and a half pounds of sugar. Cook the night before so that it will be thoroughly cold, add two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. If you wish a strawberry flavor to the cream, mash and strain them, and add sugar, one pint of berries, four ounces of sugar to two quarts of cream. Put the cream into a freezer and set in a tub or pail, fill the pail with broken ice, strew coarse salt between each layer of ice, taking care that none gets into the cream. Break the ice by putting it in an old grain sack and pounding with an ax. As the cream freezes scrape it from the bottom and sides of the freezer with a spoon. A large size lard can or tin pail may be used instead of a freezer, but in that case the cream must be often scraped from the sides and well beaten to make it fine grained.

Do Not be Deceived.

In these times of quack medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended. Electric bitters we can vouch for as being a true and reliable remedy, and that will do as recommended. They invariably cure stomach and liver complaints, Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary difficulties. We know whereof we speak, and can readily say, give them a trial. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at

Terrible Accident

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and most of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of North Roundout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye—total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to the pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. THE SUN's light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but its genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

THE SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of the superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of THE SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modelled after THE SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of THE SUN's example.

THE SUN for 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling and interesting newspaper.

By a liberal use of the means which an abundant prosperity affords, we shall make it better than ever before.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Distance from Printing House Square is not the first consideration with THE SUN. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or in Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of THE SUN's political course.

THE WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific and domestic intelligence complete THE WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

What does not know and read and like THE SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good-sized book, and indefinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for THE SUN.

Our terms are as follows:

For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns the price is 65 cents per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

THE KING FORTUNE-MAKER:

OZONE!

A New Process for Preserving all Perishable Articles, Animal and Vegetable, from Fermentation and Putrifaction, retaining their Odor and Flavor.

"OZONE—Purified air, active state of oxygen."—WEBSTER.

This preservative is not a liquid, pickle or any of the old and exploded processes, but is simply and purely OZONE, as produced and applied by an entirely new process. Ozone is the antiseptic principle of every substance and possesses the power to preserve animal and vegetable structures from decay. There is nothing on the face of the earth liable to decay or spoil which OZONE, the new Preservative, will not preserve for all time in a perfectly fresh and palatable condition.

The value of OZONE as a natural preserver has been known to our ablest chemists for years, but until now no means of producing it in a practical inexpensive, and simple manner have been discovered. Microscopic observations prove that decay is due to septic matter or minute germs that develop and feed upon animal and vegetable structures. OZONE, applied by the Prentiss method, seizes and destroys these germs at once, and thus preserves. At our office in Cincinnati can be seen almost every article that can be thought of preserved, by this process, and every visitor is welcome to come in, taste, smell, take away with him, and test in every way the merits of OZONE as a preservative. We will also preserve, free of charge, any article that is brought or sent postpaid to us, and return it to the sender, for him to keep and test.

EGGS can be treated at a cost of less than one dollar a thousand dozen, and be kept in an ordinary room six months or more, thoroughly preserved, the yolk held in its normal condition, and the eggs as fresh and perfect as on the day they were treated, and will sell as strictly "choice." The advantage in preserving eggs is readily seen; there are seasons when they can be bought for 8 or 10 cents a dozen, and by holding them can be sold for an advance of from one hundred to three hundred per cent. One man with this method can preserve 5,000 dozen a day.

FRUITS may be permitted to ripen in their native climate, and can be transported to any part of the world. The juice expressed from fruits can be held for any indefinite period without fermentation—hence the great value of this process for producing a temperance beverage. Milk and cider can be held perfectly sweet any length of time.

VEGETABLES can be kept for an indefinite period in their natural condition, retaining their odor and flavor, treated in their original packages, at a small expense. All grain, flour, meal, etc., are held in their normal condition.

FRESH MEATS, such as beef, mutton, veal, pork, poultry, game, fish, etc., preserved by this method, can be shipped to Europe, subjected to atmospheric changes, and return to this country in a state of perfect preservation.

BUTTER AFTER BEING TREATED BY THIS PROCESS will NOT become RANCID.

Dead human bodies, treated before decomposition sets in, can be held in a natural condition for weeks, without puncturing the skin or mutilating the body in any way. Hence the great value of Ozone to undertakers.

There is no change in the slightest particular in the appearance of any article thus preserved, and no trace of any foreign or unnatural odor or taste.

The process is so simple that a child can operate it as well and successfully as a man. There is no expensive apparatus or machinery required.

A room filled with different articles, such as eggs, meat, fish, etc., can be treated at one time, without additional trouble or expense.

In fact, there is nothing that Ozone will not preserve. Think of everything you can that is liable to sour, decay, or spoil, and then remember that we guarantee that Ozone will preserve it in exactly the condition you want it for any length of time. If you will remember this, it will save asking questions as to whether Ozone will preserve this or that article—it will preserve any thing and every thing you can think of.

There is not a township in the United States in which a live man can not make any amount of money, from $1,000 to $10,000 a year, that he pleases. WE DESIRE TO GET A LIVE MAN INTERESTED IN EACH COUNTY OF THE UNITED STATES, in whose hands we can place this Preservative, and through him secure the business which each county ought to produce.

A FORTUNE Awaits any man who secures control of OZONE in any Township or County.

A. C. Bowen, Marion, Ohio, cleared $2,000 in two months. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

Woods Brothers, Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, made $6,000 on eggs purchased in July and sold November 1st. $2 for a test package was their first investment.

F. K. Raymond, Morristown, Belmont County, Ohio, is clearing $2,000 a month in handling and selling Ozone. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

D. F. Webber, Charlotte, Eaton County Mich., has cleared $1,000 a month since August. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

J. B. Gaylord, 80 LaSalle Street, Chicago, is preserving eggs, fruit, etc., for the commission men of Chicago, charging 1½c per dozen for eggs, and other articles in proportion. He is preserving 5,000 dozen eggs a day, and on his business is making $3,000 a month clear. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

The Cincinnati Feed Company, 498 West Seventh Street, is making $5,000 a month handling brewers' malt, preserving and shipping it as feed to all parts of the country. Malt, unpreserved sours in twenty-four hours. Preserved by OZONE it keeps perfectly sweet for months.

These are instances which we have asked the privilege of publishing. There are scores of others. Write to any of the above parties and get the evidence direct.

Now, to prove the absolute truth of every thing we have said in this paper, we propose to place in your hands the means of proving for yourself that we have not claimed half enough. To any person who doubts any of these statements, and who is interested sufficiently to make the trip, we will pay all traveling and hotel expenses for a visit to this city, if we fail to prove any statement that we have made.

HOW TO SECURE A FORTUNE WITH OZONE.

A test package of Ozone, containing a sufficient quantity to preserve one thousand dozen eggs, or other articles in proportion, will be sent to any applicant on receipt of $2. This package will enable the applicant to pursue any line of tests and experiments he desires, and thus satisfy himself as to the extraordinary merits of Ozone as a Preservative. After having satisfied himself, and had time to look the field over to determine what he wishes to do in the future—whether to sell the article to others, or to confine it to his own use, or any other line of policy which is best suited to him and to his township or county—we will enter into an arrangement with him that will make a Fortune fashion and give us good profits. We will give exclusive township or county privileges to the first responsible applicant who orders a test package and desires to control the business in his locality. The man who secures control of Ozone for any special territory will enjoy a monopoly which will surely enrich him.

Don't let a day pass until you have ordered a Test Package and if you desire to secure an exclusive privilege, we assure you that delay may deprive you of it, for the applications come in to us by scores every mail—many by telegraph.

If you do not care to send money in advance for the test package, we will send it C. O. D.; but this will put you to the expense of charges for return of money. Our correspondence is very large; we have all we can do to attend to the shipping of orders and giving attention to our working agents. Therefore we cannot give attention to letters which do not order Ozone. If you think of any article that you need doubtful about Ozone preserving, remember we GUARANTEE THAT IT WILL PRESERVE IT, NO MATTER WHAT IT IS.

REFERENCES: We desire to call your attention to a class of references which no enterprise or firm based on any thing but the soundest business success and highest commercial merit could secure.

We refer by permission, as to our integrity and to the value of the Prentiss Preservative, to the following gentlemen: Edward C. Royer, Member Board of Public Works; E. O. Eshelby, City Comptroller; Armor Smith, Jr., Collector Internal Revenue; Worthington & Worthington, Attorneys; Martin H. Harrell and B. F. Hopkins, county Commissioners; W. S. Coppeller, County Auditor; all of Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio. These gentlemen are each familiar with the merits of our Preservative and know from actual observation that we have, without question

THE MOST VALUABLE ARTICLE IN THE WORLD.

The $2 you invest in a test package will surely lead you to secure a township or county, and then your way is absolutely clear to make from $2,000 to $20,000 a year.

Give your full address in every letter, and send your letter to

A communication from the State Board of Agriculture makes the following announcement: "At a meeting of the State Board of Agriculture, held Nov. 23, arrangements were made for holding one of the Farmers' Institutes at Macon Centre, Feb. 2nd and 3rd, under the management of Prof. C. K. Carpenter, of the Agricultural College, who will in due time call a meeting of the farmers of Lenawee county to make arrangements for the same." We trust the farmers of this county will assist in making this a profitable meeting. And we feel safe in warranting a kindly reception and ample provision for all temporal wants from the farmers of Macon.

BROOKLYN.

We have no Georgia minstrels to criticise, but a company of English sparrows have taken possession of Mr. Miller's evergreen trees and are playing "Much Ado About Nothing" from early morning till moonlight.—They are the most persistent, tireless chatterboxes that ever invaded silence and I know of no bird of such small size that will talk half the night like a regiment of blackbirds making arrangements for a southern excursion. They are genuine little Brittons, neither exhibiting fear of the cats or any one else. They deploy as fearlessly on the skirmish line as some who are waging a paper battle in the Exponent.

It is singular how much irritation lurks in a printed line. A square yard of blister is a rose-leaf compared with a distasteful fact. A man may pray for any sort of unpopular reform, or sit on a picket-fence and thunder his opinion to the whole neighborhood. He can whistle like a boy when school is dismissed if he wants to, and the entertainment will be spiced with good humor, but if it gets into print everybody, and the editor, gets into a pickle.

I have had no occasion to use my hair brush for a week because I occupy a platform where some liberal dispositioned person has spilled out all the mice he has caught in his church trap. Each one is in haste to select his mouse, hence the squabble. If they would stop and invoice the stock of evidence on hand the verdict would be different from what we thought, and a teapot half the size of a baby's thimble hold the tempest.

CLINTON.

The Baptist church has opened a series of meetings to be conducted by Rev. H. W. Brown.

The Episcopal social was held at the residence of Mrs. E. S. Tate, Tuesday eve. An enjoyable time was reported by all present.

The funeral services of Mrs. H. P. Downs were held Sunday morning, at the Baptist church. Mrs. Downs has for many years been a prominent member of this church. The remains of the deceased were placed in the vault for a few days before interment.

The Red Ribbon club met Monday evening at Freese's hall. The program, consisting of readings, recitations and vocal music was very good. We are glad to see the re-awakened interest in the society.

The entertainment given by the Stewart Concert Co. was not as well attended as the troupe deserved. The troupe is of unquestionable merit and the cause for which they are working is a noble one. They should meet with crowded houses. A collection for their benefit was taken up at the Congregational church Sunday eve.

The supper and entertainment given by the ladies of the Episcopal and Congregational societies was a decided success. From two to three hundred people took supper between the hours of five and seven, and the hall was filled to its utmost capacity in the evening.

The hotel recently opened by S. Erskine is prospering finely, although the previous efforts in that direction would seem discouraging. Yet to one with a determined will, they will probably prove but a small barrier in the way of success, which from all accounts he richly deserves.

Two young gentlemen of this place, a few evenings since engaged in quite an exciting discussion, which bystanders saw was to eventually end in blows. They were not mistaken and after a few rounds it became necessary for the marshall to interpose his authority in order to restore peace. The whole affair was, to say the least, disgraceful.

THE December term of the Circuit Court convened in Adrian last Tuesday. This is the last term of court which will be held by Judge Pratt.—The new judge, Andrew Howell, will don the judicial ermine on the first of January next.

HIS FIRST LOVE.

I remember meeting you
In September, sixty-two.
We were eating, both of us:
And the meeting happened thus:
Accidental, on the road,
(Sentimental episode?)
I was gushing, you were shy;
You were blushing—so was I
I was smitten, so were you,
(All that's written here is true.)
And money? not a bit,
Rather funny, wasn't it?
Vows were plighted—happy pair!
How delighted people were!
But your father—to be sure—
Thought it rather premature;
And your mother—strange to say—
Was a nother in the way.
What a heaven vanished then!
(You were seven I was ten!)
That was many years ago—
Don't let anybody know.

A STAGE DRIVER'S STORY.

Fourteen years ago I drove stage from Danbury to Littleton, N. H., a distance of sixty-two miles. I had to await the arrival of two or three coaches, and as I did not start until after dinner, I very often had a good distance to drive after dark. It was in the dead of winter, and the season had been a rough one. A great deal of snow had fallen, and the drifts were plenty and deep. The mail that I carried was not due at Littleton, by contract, until 1 o'clock in the morning, but that winter the postmaster was obliged to sit up a little later than that hour for me.

One day in January, when I drove up with my mail at Danbury, the postmaster called me into his office.

"Pete," said he, with an important, serious look, "there is some pretty heavy money packages in the bag," and he pointed to it as he spoke. He said the money was from Boston to some land agents near the Canada line. Then he asked me if I had any passengers who were going through to Littleton. I told him I did not know; "but suppose I have not," says I.

"Why the agent of the lower route came in to-day, and said that two suspicious characters were on the stage that came in last night, and he suspects that they have their eye on this mail, so it will stand you in hand to be a little careful this evening."

He said that the agent had described one of them as being a short, thick set fellow, about 40 years of age, with long hair and a thick clump of beard under his chin, but none on the side of his face. He did not know anything about the other. I told him I guessed there was no danger.

"Oh, no, not if you have got passengers all the way through; but I only told you this that you might look out sharp when you change horses."

I answered that I should do so, and then took the bag under my arm and left the office. I stowed the mail away under my seat a little more carefully than usual, placing it so I could keep my feet against it, but beyond that I did not feel any concern. It was past one when we started. I had four passengers, two of whom only rode to my first stopping place. I reached Gowan's Mills at dark, when we stopped for supper, and where my two passengers concluded to stop for the night.

At about 6 o'clock in the morning left Gowan's Mills alone, having two horses and a pung.

I had seventeen miles to go, and it was a hard seventeen too. The night was quite clear, but the wind was sharp and cold, the loose snow flying in every direction, while the drifts were deep and closely packed. It was slow, tedious work, and my horses soon became leg-weary and restive.

At the distance of six miles I came to a small settlement called Bull's Corners, where I took fresh horses. I had been two hours going that distance. As I was going to start a man came up and asked me if I was going through to Littleton. I told him I should go through if the thing could possibly be done. He said he was anxious to go, and, as he had no baggage, I told him to jump in and make himself as comfortable as possible.

I was gathering up my reins when the hostler came up and asked me if I knew that one of my horses had cut himself badly. I jumped out and found that one of the animals had got a deep cork cut on the left off foot. I gave such directions as I considered necessary, and was about to turn away when the hostler remarked that he thought I came alone.

I told him I did.

"Then where did you get that passenger?" said he.

"He just got in," I answerered

"Got in from where?"

"I don't know."

"Well, now," said the hostler, "that's kind of curious. There ain't been no such a man at the house, and I know there ain't been none at the neighbors."

"Let's have a look at his face," said I. "We can get that much at any rate. Do you go back with me, and when I get into the pung just hold your lantern so that the light will shine into his face."

He did as I wished, and as I stepped into the pung I got a fair view of such portions of my passenger's face as were not muffled up. I saw a short, thick frame, full, hard features, and I could almost see that there was a heavy beard under the chin. I thought of the man whom the postmaster had described to me, but I did not think seriously upon it until I had started. Perhaps I had gone half a mile when I noticed that the mail bag wasn't in its place under my feet.

"Hallo!" says I, holding up my horses a little, "where's my mail?"

My passenger sat on a seat behind me, and I turned toward him.

"Here is a bag of some kind that slipped back under my feet," and he said giving it a kick, as though he would shove it forward.

Jut at this moment my horses lumbered into a deep snowdrift, and I was forced to get out and lead them through it.

This took me all of fifteen minutes, and when I got in again I pulled the mail bag forward and got my feet upon it. As I was doing this I saw the man taking something from his lap, beneath the buffalo, and put it into his breast pocket. This I thought was a pistol. I had caught the gleam of a barrel in the starlight, and when I had time to reflect I knew I could not be mistaken.

About this time I began to think somewhat seriously. From what I had heard and seen I soon made up my mind that the individual behind me not only wanted to rob me of my mail, but was prepared to rob me of my life. If I resisted him he would shoot me, and perhaps he meant to perform the delectable operation at any rate. While I was pondering the horses plunged into another snowdrift, and I was again forced to get out and tread down the snow before them. I asked my passenger if he wouldn't help me, but he didn't feel very well and wouldn't try; so I worked all alone, and was all of a quarter of an hour getting through the drifts.

When I got into the sleigh again, I began to feel for the mail bag with my feet. I found it where I had left it, but when I attempted to withdraw my foot I discovered that it had become fast in something. I thought it was the buffalo, and tried to kick it clear; but the more I kicked the more closely it held. I reached down my hand, and after feeling about a few moments I found that my foot was in the mail bag. I felt again, and found my hand in among the packages of letters and papers. I ran my fingers over the edges of the opening, and became assured that the stout leather had been cut with a knife.

Here was a discovery. I began to wish that I had taken a little more forethought before leaving Danbury; but, as I knew making such wishes was only a waste of time, quickly gave it up and began to consider what I had better do under the circumstances. I was not long in making up my mind upon a few essential points. First, the man behind me was a villain; second, he had cut open the mail-bag and robbed it of some valuable matter—he must have known the money letters by their size and shape; third, he meant to leave the stage on the first opportunity; fourthly, he was prepared to shoot me if I attempted to arrest or detain him.

I resolved these things over in my mind and pretty soon thought of a course to pursue. I knew that to get my hands upon the rascal I must take him wholly unawares, and this I could not do while he was behind me, for his eyes were upon me all the time, so I must resort to stratagem. Only a little distance ahead was a house, and an old farmer named Lougee lived there; directly before it a huge snow bank stretched across the road, through which a track had been cleared with shovels.

As we approached the cot I saw a light in the front room, as I felt confident I should, for the old man generally sat up until the stage went by. I drove on and when nearly opposite the dwelling stood up, as I had frequently done when approaching difficult places. I saw the snow bank ahead and I could distinguish the deep cut which had been shoveled through it. I urged my horses to a good speed, and when near the bank, forced them into it.

One of the runners mounted the edge of the bank, after which the other ran into the cut, thus throwing the sleigh over about as quick as though lightning had struck it. My passenger had not calculated on any such movement, and wasn't prepared. He rolled out in the deep snow with a heavy buffalo robe about him, while I alighted directly on the top of him. I punched his head in the snow, and sang out for old Lougee. I did not have to call a second time, for the farmer had come to the window to see me pass, and as soon as he saw my sleigh overturned he had lighted his lantern and hurried out.

"What's to pay?" asked the old man as he came up.

"Lead the horses into the track and then come here," I said.

As I spoke I partially loosened my hold on the villain's throat, and he drew a pistol from his bosom; I saw it in good season and jammed his head into the snow again, and got it away from him.

By this time Lougee had led the horses out and came back, and I explained the matter to him in as few words as was possible.

We hauled the rascal out in the road, and upon examination we found about twenty packages of letters which he had stolen from the mail bag and stowed away in his pocket.

He swore, threatened and prayed, but we paid no attention to his blarney.

Lougee got some stout cord, and then, when he had securely bound the villain, we tumbled him into the pung.

Then I asked the old man if he would accompany me to Littleton, and he said, "Of course I will."

So he got his coat and muffler, and ere long we started on.

I reached the end of my route with the mail all safe, though not as snug as it might have been, and the bags a little the worse for the trick that had been played upon them. However, the mail robber was secure, and within a week he was identified by some officers from Concord as an old offender, and I am inclined to the opinion that he is in the State Prison at the present time; at any rate he was there the last time I heard of him.

That is the only time I ever had any mail troubles, and I think that, under all the circumstances, I came out of it pretty well.

Do We Eat too Much.

The amount of nourishment which a person needs greatly depends on his constitution, state of health, habits and work. A sedentary man requires less than one whose duties demand the exercise of his muscles, and a brain-worker needs more than an idler. But unquestionably the majority of us take more than we need. Indeed, food and work are distributed most unequally. The man of leisure is also the man of means, and, accordingly, fares sumptuously every day; while the laborer toils for eight hours and finds it difficult to get enough to repair the waste of his tissues. Yet a Chinaman or a Bengalee will toil under a tropical sun and find a few pice worth of rice or jowrai sufficient to sustain his strength. A Frenchman will not eat half what an Englisman engaged in the same work will demand, and a Spanish laborer, content in ordinary times with a watermelon and a bit of black bread, will toil in the vineyards and grow fat on a dietary of onion porridge and grapes. It is true that Mr. Bassy, when building the continental railways found that one English navy was worth a couple of spare fed foreigners. But on the other hand, the British Columbian and California gold-diggers, than whom a more magnificent set of athletes does not exist, live in the remote mountains of the Far West mainly on beans flavored with a few cubes of pork. But they also obtain the best of water and the purest of air, and their out-door life and active exercise enable them to digest every ounce of their frugal fare. The English soldiers, though better fed than those of any army except the American, do not get one-half the amount of solid nutriment which the idlest of club-loungers considers indispensable for his sustenance. An athlete in training is allowed even less food, yet he prospers on the limited fare and prolongs his life by the regimen to which he has been subjected. King Victor Emanuel was a monarch of the most robust physique; yet he only ate one meal per day, and it is manifestly absurd for any man to require three more or less weighty meals and an afternoon cup of tea to support the exertion of walking to the club, riding an hour in the park, writing a note or two, and dancing a couple of miles around a ball-room. The ancients had their "amethustoi," or "sober stones," by which they regulated their indulgence at table. The moderns have not even this. But they have their gout and their livers to warn them, when it is too late, that nature has been overtasked.

Tree Culture on Waste Land.

Hitherto the abundance of natural timber in this country has made it easy to dispense with timber culture, and for the most part our land owners have taken little interest in such slow-growing crops. This state of things, however, is rapidly passing away. The demand for special woods for manufacturing purposes is steadily and rapidly increasing, while the natural supply is diminishing and must ultimately become quite inadequate. Meantime there are millions of acres of land suitable for timber culture and for nothing else, except poor pasturage that our land owners are allowing to lie waste and idle for lack of a little forethought, and too frequently our would-be thrifty farmers will risk their surplus means in wild-cat speculations, promising but never yielding large and speedy returns, when the same money spent in planting timber would soon convert their worthless swamps and stony places into valuable properties.

A correspondent writing from Wisconsin tells of a piece of land that was planted with walnut twenty-three years ago. The land was flooded every spring and summer, and was unfit for any ordinary cultivation. The trees are now from sixteen to twenty inches through, and are sold for $27,000. No particulars are given as to the cost of planting the grove, or the amount of attention it has had during the years of growth. There can be little doubt, however, that the investment was small in comparison with the return, and the land would otherwise have remained entirely unproductive. To the country the timber crop was so much clear gain. It is clear that our national resources must be enormously increased by a similar utilization by timber culture of lands which are now left unused and unproductive, and the planters would find their groves a surer investment for the security of their family possessions than any saving bank deposit.

Feeding Horses.

More horses are annually killed or injured by over-feeding and by injudicious feeding than by starving or most other causes. In horses we can detect as many different temperaments and dispositions as in man, though but few horse-owners take this fact into consideration in the management of their horses, particularly in that part of it relating to food and feeding. Some horses are natural gluttons, and they must be seen to carefully or they will, at times, be apt to seriously injure themselves by feeding too fast, while much of the food they consume will pass through them undigested, for the simple reason that it has not been properly masticated. We like to see what is termed a "good feeder," (one who does not mince or pick over his food) but then we are not at all partial to the ravenous one. Such a horse as the latter will dive into his feed with mouth wide open, and invariably take more at a mouthful than he can either hold in his mouth or properly masticate. There are several ways to fix such fellows, one way being to mix some fine hay with his oats, while moistening the oats or feeding cut food prevents him from pandering to his greedy propensity. A horse with a delicate appetite is usually a tender, delicate animal, and not at all desirable.

The trouble with most persons who keep horses, no matter whether on farm for farm work, or for driving purposes, is they feed too much hay; and to this cause can be attributed the general sluggishness often manifested by the horses until they have been working a couple of hours, while the wind is also much impaired. Night is the only time when hay should be fed, especially to animals used for quick work. Even the slow plow team should have but little hay at the morning and noon feeds, but give them a generous supply at the evening meal. By doing this, your horse will keep in better spirits and condition, and be free from any tendency to "pot-belly" which horsemen so much dislike to see.

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorses Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only roliable remedy in the market. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways.

A FEW EXCEPTIONS.—"Why," thundered an impassioned orator at a temperance mass meeting "in only one year, in twelve short months, the people of the United States drank 27,866,915 gallons of beer, and 7,833,281 gallons of whiskey! How much of that hideous aggregate did you drink?" he shrieked, glaring around at the respectable vice presidents on the platform. And in the impressive pause that followed, the corresponding secretary arose and said that with the exception of the tonic drops she was compelled to take before breakfast and the anti-malarial bitters that Dr. Bolus prescribed for her, and a little pale ale at night which she couldn't close her eyes in sleep without it, and maybe an occasional drop of brandy for the neuralgia, she had not tasted a drop of spiritual or fermentuous liquids since she joined the society. And a great hush fell upon the meeting like the voice of a man who had just been asked for ten dollars.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Terrible Accident

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could but intensely painful inflamation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye.—Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to the pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the Liver and Kidneys. Cures constipation, and all weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all our druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

THE KING FORTUNE-MAKER:

OZONE!

A New Process for Preserving all Perishable Articles, Animal and Vegetable, from Fermentation and Putrifaction, retaining their Odor and Flavor.

"OZONE—Purified air, active state of oxygen."—WEBSTER.

This preservative is not a liquid, pickle or any of the old and exploded processes, but is simply and purely OZONE, as produced and applied by an entirely new process. Ozone is the antiseptic principle of every substance, and possesses the power to preserve animal and vegetable structures from decay. There is nothing on the face of the earth liable to decay or spoil which OZONE, the new Preservative, will not preserve for all time in a perfectly fresh and palatable condition.

The value of OZONE as a natural preserver has been known to our abler chemists for years, but until now no means of producing it in a practical inexpensive, and simple manner have been discovered.

Microscopic observations prove that decay is due to septic matter or minute germs that develop and feed upon animal and vegetable structures. OZONE, applied by the Prentiss method, seizes and destroys these germs at once, and thus preserves. At our office in Cincinnati can be seen almost every article that can be thought of preserved by this process, and every visitor is welcome to convince in, taste, smell, take away with him, and test in every way the merits of OZONE as a preservative. We will also preserve, free of charge, any article that is brought or sent postpaid to us, and return it to the sender, for him to keep and test.

EGGS can be treated at a cost of less than one dollar a thousand dozen, and be kept in an ordinary room six months or more, thoroughly preserved, the yolk held in its normal condition, and the eggs as fresh and perfect as on the day they were treated, and will sell as strictly "choice." The advantage in preserving eggs is readily seen; there are seasons when they can be bought for 5 or 10 cents a dozen, and by holding them can be sold for an advance of from one hundred to three hundred per cent. One man with this method can preserve 5,000 dozen a day.

FRUITS of the world. The juice expressed from fruits can be held for any indefinite period without fermentation—hence the great value of this process for producing a temperance beverage. Milk and cider can be held perfectly sweet any length of time.

VEGETABLES can be kept for an indefinite period in their natural condition, retaining their odor and flavor, treated in their original packages, at a small expense. Also grain, flour, meal, etc., are held in their normal condition.

FRESH MEATS, such as beef, mutton, veal, pork, poultry, game, fish, etc., preserved by this method, can be shipped to Europe, subjected to atmospheric changes, and return to this country in a state of perfect preservation.

BUTTER AFTER BEING TREATED BY THIS PROCESS will NOT become RANCID.

Dead human bodies, treated before decomposition sets in, can be held in a natural condition for weeks without puncturing the skin or mutilating the body in any way. Hence the great value of Ozone to undertakers.

There is no change in the slightest particular in the appearance of any article thus preserved, and no trace of any foreign or unnatural odor or taste.

The process is so simple that a child can operate it as well and successfully as a man. There is no expensive apparatus or machinery required.

A room filled with different articles, such as eggs, meat, fish, etc., can be treated at one time, without additional trouble or expense.

☞ In fact, there is nothing that Ozone will not preserve. Think of everything you can think of that is liable to sour, decay, or spoil, and then remember that we guarantee that Ozone will preserve it in exactly the condition you want it for any length of time. If you will remember this, it will save asking questions as to whether Ozone will preserve this or that article—it will preserve any thing and every thing you can think of.

There is not a township in the United States in which a live man can not make any amount of money from $1,000 to $10,000 a year, that he pleases. WE DESIRE TO GET A LIVE MAN INTERESTED IN EVERY COUNTY OF THE UNITED STATES, in whose hands we can place this Preservative, and through him secure the business which each county ought to produce.

A FORTUNE Awaits any man who secures control of OZONE in any Township or County.

A. C. Bowen, Marion, Ohio, cleared $2,000 in two months. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

Woods Brothers, Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, made $6,000 on eggs purchased in July and sold November 1st. $2 for a test package was their first investment.

F. K. Raymond, Morristown, Belmont County, Ohio, is clearing $2,000 a month in handling and selling Ozone. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

D. F. Webber, Charlotte, Eaton County, Mich., has cleared $1,000 a month since August. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

J. B. Gaylord, 80 LaSalle Street, Chicago, is preserving eggs, fruit, etc., for the commission men of Chicago, charging 1½c per dozen for eggs, and other articles in proportion. He is preserving 5,000 dozen eggs a day, and on his business is making $2,000 a month clear. $2 for a test package was his first investment.

The Cincinnati Feed Company, 498 West Seventh Street, is making $5,000 a month handling brewers' malt, preserving and shipping it as feed to all parts of the country. Malt, unpreserved sours in twenty-four hours. Preserved by OZONE it keeps perfectly sweet for months.

These are instances which we have asked the privilege of publishing. There are scores of others. Write to any of the above parties and get the evidence direct.

Now, to prove the absolute truth of every thing we have said in this paper, we propose to place in your hands the means of proving for yourself that we have not claimed half enough. To any person who doubts any of these statements, and who is interested sufficiently to make a trip, we will pay all traveling and hotel expenses for a visit to this city, if we fail to prove any statement that we have made.

HOW TO SECURE A FORTUNE WITH OZONE.

A test package of Ozone, containing a sufficient quantity to preserve one thousand dozen eggs, or other articles in proportion, will be sent to any applicant on receipt of $2. This package will enable any applicant to pursue any line of tests and experiments he desires, and thus satisfy himself as to the extraordinary merits of Ozone as a Preservative. After having satisfied himself, and had time to look the field over to determine what he wishes to do in the future—whether to sell the article to others, or to confine it to his own use, or any other line of policy which is best suited to him—we will enter into an arrangement with him that will make a fortune for him and give us good profits. We will give exclusive township or county privileges to the responsible applicant who orders a test package and desires to control the business in his locality. The man who secures control of Ozone for any special territory will enjoy a monopoly which will surely enrich him.

Don't let a day pass until you have ordered a Test Package, and if you desire to secure an exclusive privilege, we assure you that delay may deprive you of it, for the applications come in to us by scores every mail—many by telegraph.

If you do not care to send money in advance for the test package, we will send it C. O. D.; but this will put you to the expense of charges for return of money. Our correspondence is very large; we do all we can do to attend to the shipping of orders and giving attention to our working agents therefore we cannot give attention to letters which do not order Ozone. If you think of any article that you are doubtful about Ozone preserving, remember we GUARANTEE THAT IT WILL PRESERVE IT, NO MATTER WHAT IT IS.

REFERENCES: We desire to call your attention to a class of references which no enterprise but a firm based on any thing but the soundest business success and highest commercial merit could secure.

We refer by permission, as to our integrity and to the value of the Prentiss Preservative, to the following gentlemen: Edward C. Boyce, Member Board of Public Works; E. O. Eshelby, City Comptroller; Armor Smith, Jr., Collector Internal Revenue; Wulsin & Worthington, Attorneys; Max H. Harrell and B. F. Hopkins, county commissioners; W. S. Cappeller, County Auditor all of Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio. These gentlemen are each familiar with the merits of the Preservative, and know from actual observation that we have without question

THE MOST VALUABLE ARTICLE IN THE WORLD.

The $2 you invest in a test package will surely lead you to secure a township or county, and the way is absolutely clear to make from $2,000 to $20,000 a year.

Iceland Ponies.

GREAT AND HARDY LITTLE THOROUGHBREDS AMONG THE HORSES.

In order to travel with speed and comfort, each Icelander requires a couple of ponies, which are saddled and ridden alternately, while the loose horses and those carrying the baggage are driven forward in a little herd, with shouts and cracking of whips. Spurs are unknown, and a Icelandic whip is certainly a moust humane invention; with a thin leather strap for a thong, and devoid altogether of a lash, the ponies despise it utterly, and although it makes a noise, it evidently does not hurt. Accustomed from his birth to find his way over his wild mountain pastures, an Iceland pony is so clever and sure-footed as to give his rider a sense of security, even in the most awkward places, and if left to himself he will never make a mistake. He is as cautious as an elephant, snuffs at every suspicious place, and testing it with his fore-foot, if dissatisfied, nothing will induce him to proceed, and he turns aside to search for a safer way, being particularly on his guard when crossing water, upon a bridge of snow, or when in the neighborhood of boiling springs. Even where the ground was roughest I have not hesitated to throw the bridle on the pony's neck and open a knife in order to scrape certain cartridges too large for the rifle I carried under my arm. The gallant little beast picks his way rapidly over all obstacles, like the sturdy Stulka, who can knit and stare at the passing stranger, while she strides along over "Hraun," as if she were on a shaven lawn. Boggy ground is to a horseman always a troublesome obstacle; but so remarkably dry was the country in June 1878, that bogs could be avoided, and we were a good deal annoyed by dust and drifting sand. The ponies got nothing to eat, except the scanty herbage by the wayside, and were much disposed to linger wherever they could find a few blades of grass. To any such temptation the poor animals were, however, not often exposed, and they jogged along with great perseverance, making up for little food with much drink at the numerous streams which they had to ford. Iceland ponies are generally of a light color, dun, pale chesnut, white, or piebald; under a rough exterior they hide many good qualities, and are as well adapted for the peculiar country which they inhabit as is the noblest thoroughbred of Arabia. A vicious animal is almost unknown, and a dealer in ponies, who has passed more of them through his hands than anybody else in the business, assured me that he had not encountered one. The endurance of the ponies is astonishing; they will keep steadily jog for hours together, and travel on through the long summer days of northern latitude with no other sustenance than may be picked up during their's midway halt.

Drinking Toasts.

In private life toasting has almost entirely disappeared. A hundred years ago and less it was rife in the extreme. Half a dozen men could not sit down to dinner without drinking toasts. In the event of any great victory there was no end of it. The nation was for a time half insane in drinking the health of Nelson, Wellington, or other successful commanders by sea and land. It was part of a young man's education to get familiar with a few toasts which he could bring out when called upon in turn at evening entertainments. At the age of fifty he had become so hackneyed in toasting as never to be at a loss for a hero or for a sentiment suitable to the character of the company. At the very least he could give "The rising generation," "All ships at sea," or "May the wings of friendship never lose a feather."

Curious, and not a little melancholy to think, what vast numbers of worthy people now gone to their rest habitually killed the time in soaking and trying to amuse themselves over this kind of driveling nonsense. As yet, the popular mind had not been roused to inquiry on a variety of important questions. A great part of life was consumed in dawdling and drinking, as is still the case among certain classes in small country towns.

Discountenanced in general society, complimentary toasting holds its ground in public festivities. There the libations are observedly copious, as provocative of oratorical display, and as much attended with senseless uproar as ever. Corporation dinners, charity dinners, reception and farewell dinners are all alike in these respects. Every toast must be prefaced by a drink all round. The quantity of champagne consumed on some occasions is immense, the removal of a wagon-load of empty bottles not at all unusual. What may be the different degress of intoxication we shall not attempt to specify. One would not like to be too severe in a matter admitting of many extenuations. At the same time, we may be permitted to say that the example set at these festive demonstrations is not quite in accordance with the solemn counsels ordinarily uttered on the evils of intemperance. Men in high position, who are nimble at toasting at grand dinners, do not seem to perceive that they are acting inconsistently in holding out a bad example to the poor, whom they are constantly lecturing on the terrible consequences of misexpenditure on drink.—Chambers' Journal.

When women are the advisers, the lords of creation don't take the advice till they have persuaded themselves that it is just what they intended to do; then they act upon it, and if it succeeds they give the weaker vessel half the credit; if it fails they generally give her the whole.—[Louisa Alcott.

Death to rats and vermin, Parsons' Exterminator.

Inoculation with Snake Poison

A wonderful prophylactic for snake bites (if true) is given by Mme. Calderon de la Barca in her "Life in Mexico," page 431. Speaking of Tampico, she says: "We have just been hearing a curious circumstance connected with poisonous reptiles, which I have heard for the first time. Here and all along the coast the people are in the habit of inoculating themselves with the poison of the rattlesnake, which renders them safe from the bite of all venomous animals. The person to be inoculated is pricked with the tooth of the serpent on the tongue, in both arms and on various parts of the body, and the venom introduced into the wounds.

An eruption comes out which lasts a few days. Ever after these persons can handle the most venomous snakes with impunity; can make them come by calling them; have great pleasure in fondling them, and the bite of these persons is poisonous! You will not believe this, but we have the testimony of seven or eight respectable merchants to the fact.

A man who breakfasted here this morning says that he has been vainly endeavoring to make up his mind to submit to the operation, as he is very much exposed where he lives, and is obliged to travel a great deal on the coast; that when he goes on these expeditions he is always accompanied by his servant, an inoculated negro, who has the power to cure him should he be bit, by sucking the poison from the wound. He also saw this negro cure the bite given by an inoculated Indian to a white boy with whom he was fighting, and who was the stronger of the two. The stories of the Eastern jugglers and their power over these reptiles may, perhaps, be accounted for in this way. I cannot say that I should like to have so much snaky nature transferred into my composition, nor to live amongst people whose bite is venomous."

A Physician of Great Prominence

in thirty-sixth street, New York city was unable to even help Mr. Wm. McKee, of Patterson, N. J., suffering the agonies always attendant upon diseased kidneys. As an honest man and practitioner he prescribed and cured him by using one bottle of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Make the Best of Things.

We excuse a man for an occasional depression, just as we endure a rainy day. But who could endure 365 days of cold drizzle? Yet there are men who are, without cessation, somber and charged with evil prognostication. We may be born with a melancholy temperament, but that is no reason why we should yield to it. There is a way of shuffling the burden. In the lottery of life there are more prizes drawn than blanks, and to one misfortune there are fifty advantages. Despondency is the most unprofitable feeling a man can have. One good laugh is a bombshell exploding in the right place, while spleen and discontent is a gun that kicks over the man that shoots it off. Some must have got into heaven backward. Let us stand off from despondencies. Listen for sweet notes rather than discords. In a world where God has put exquisite tinge upon the shell washed in the surf, and planted a paradise of bloom in a child's cheek, let us leave it to the owl to hoot, and the toad to croak, and the fault-finder to complain. Take out-door exercise and avoid late suppers, if you would have a cheerful disposition. The habit of complaint finally drops into peevishness and people become waspish and unapproachable.—Baptist Weekly.

Severe Drouths.

An interesting record is that of severe drouths as far back as the landing of the Pilgrims. How many times are observations like the following made: "Such a hot season!" "Such dry weather!" "Such wet weather!" "Such high winds!" "Such foggy weather!" etc. Here is a list showing the number of days without rain during the summers of various years from 1621 to 1876:

1621, 24 days.	1715, 46 days.	1773, 80 days.
1630, 41 "	1728, 61 "	1791, 82 "
1657, 75 "	1730, 92 "	1812, 28 "
1662, 80 "	1741, 72 "	1856, 24 "
1674, 85 "	1749, 108 "	1871, 42 "
1688, 84 "	1755, 42 "	1875, 26 "
1694, 65 "	1762, 123 "	1876, 26 "
1705, 49 "

It will be seen that the longest drouth ever occurring in America was in the summer of 1762. No rain fell from the first of May to the first of September. Many persons will doubtless feel relieved to know that the cutting off of forests don't appear to have made drouths any worse than they were a hundred years ago.

TARDINESS.—A little cattention to the matters of absence and tardiness, on the part of the parents, will save much annoyance to the teacher, and what, is of more moiment, will foster in the pupil those habits of regularity and punctuality which are absolutely essential prerequisites to his future success in life. I would also suggest that the little studying which the pupil is required to do out of school should be carefully overlooked by the parent, as tending to form similar good habits. F.F.H.

It ought to be more generally known that wheat flour is probably the best possible article to throw over a fire caused by the spilling and igniting of kerosene. It ought to be known because flour is always within convenient reach, and often valuable articles of clothing, blankets, carpets, etc., are destroyed in extinguishing such fires. Ashes or sand are equally as good.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!
A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 50 years standing. None need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Indian Ointment allays the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is guaranteed only for Piles, Itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. M. McConnberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, and this is no pleasure to say that I have found anything which gave such prompt, sure, and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 952 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. They are located in 788 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 363 places of over 5,000 population; and 468 County Seats. For copy of List and other information address GEO. P. Ague Cure is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

The manufacture of fancy cards of beautiful colors and elaborate designs to be used as personal gifts on Christmas, New Years and birthday anniversaries has increased in a remarkable rate during the past few years. The custom, which had its origin in England and upon the Continent has traveled across the Atlantic and has become an established fashion in the United States. The Magazine of Art for December contains a lengthy review of the business of Christmas cards, and an account of two exhibitions which were held in England during the past season in the interests of this trade. At one of these exhibitions 1150 different designs of Christmas cards were shown. The article referred to says: Many of these designs were mere drawings, like other drawings—landscapes of ordinary size and character, and flowers, but where the competitive labor had been undertaken as an exercise in decorative art par excellence, more interesting attempts were made. Among all the cards now in vogue, the Christmas card is supreme. By what caprice this invention, which until lately has been signalized by bad taste in both design and color, has been welcomed with so wild an enthusiasm it is impossible to say. Some people may remember the dawn of the Christmas card; sooth to say, it was a vulgar little work of art, with lace paper round its edge; but the sentiment of the time was preserved by means of the snowy spray, the robin, and the cluster of hollyberries, which generally formed the motif of the design. But the tyranny of the Christmas card was not then established; we might send highly colored robins to our friends at the festive season or we might abstain; the Briton's birthright of freedom was not infringed in this matter, nor was it until the bird, the snow and the holly had long been superceded, that men and women were constrained to buy Christmas cards, whether they would or no, and to bestow them upon equally enslaved and reluctant friends and acquaintances. The law having gone forth, however, for such time as it shall last, it is desirable that the design and colors of our missives should be improved. Perhaps only an anti-aesthetic person would deny the recent general spread of better taste in the daily life of English people, for every one else is agreed that the details of house furnishing, the decorated adjuncts of our homes, and the trifles of social life are all expressive of a rapidly reviving taste. Of course the thing was not to be done at once; good color for instance may become the fashion, when immediately the parodies of good color crowd the shop windows, and the tyrant builders devise caricatures of the dadoes and tintings dear to the artistic, parodies which are ten times more hideous than the old familiar and unobservable offences. Such little drawbacks rather emphasize than contradict the general improvement, and taste being on the increase there is no reason why Christmas cards among other things, should not be made a source of positive pleasure by reason of their beauty. And the Christmas cards which are placed on the market this year excel those of all former years and certainly are beautiful both in the common and the artistic sense of that term.

THE December Wide Awake is out with a gay little operetta for the young folks, which they will welcome for their Christmas entertainments. It is entitled "Prince Puss-in-Boots," and all the performers represent cats and are clad in the most bewitching of furry costumes. The music, which is given entire, is by Louis C. Elson, the words by Mrs. Nina Gray Clarke. A more dainty and laugh provoking entertainment could not well be desired. The number opens with the best short story of the year, "Rob's Father," by Eleanor Putnam. The readings for the C. Y. F. R. U. are well worth while the attention of young folks everywhere; and it is to be hoped that thousands of our young people will join the Reading Union before the Course of 1882 is completed. Wide Awake permanently enlarged, is but $2.50 a year. Ella Farman, Editor.—D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

CAPITAL NOTES.

Gen. Sherman recommends that a company of cavalry be stationed at the Yellowstone park to preserve it.

It is declared at Washington that neither Brady nor Dorsey will be indicted by the present grand jury.

All offers of compromise in the long-pending Chicago whisky case have, it is said, been refused by Judge Folger.

The United States ship Constitution will be soon put out of commission. Her officers are placed on waiting orders.

Messrs. Lord & Williams, at Tucson, Arizona, have been taken off the list of United States depositories. The firm speculated.

THE BORDEAUX EXHIBITION.

The department of state, is in receipt of a communication from Consul Roosevelt, at Bordeaux, relative to the exhibition of agricultural products to be held there, from June 1 to Nov. 1, 1882. This exhibition will be of special interest to American vine-growers and distillers, as from the ravages of the phylloxera in the most productive vine district of Europe, there are strong probabilities of an important market being created for American wine and spirits. The communication will be published in full in January, with a number of consular reports, by the state department.

THREATENING LETTERS.

The following is a specimen of letters received by Scoville, Judge Cox and the assassin at the rate of a dozen a day.

"MILWAUKEE, WIS.—C. J. Guiteau, Judge Cox, and the jury who are now trying Guiteau: GENTLEMEN—You are hereby notified that if the trial of Guiteau for the murder of Gen. J. A. Garfield results in the acquital of the prisoner, he and you may commend your souls to a merciful God, and say farewell to your relatives. We are now 1,000 strong in this city. Branch organizations are being formed in all the principal cities of the country. We expect at least 20,000 from New York, and the whole state of Ohio. Have you heard of Lon Williams? Our object is death to Guiteau, and he cannot escape us. If he is acquitted or declared insane, we are sworn to march to Washington and lynch the assassin, together with Judge Cox and the jury. Outraged justice demands a sacrifice for the deliberate murder of the noble Garfield, for the farce which has been permitted to invade her solemn temples, for the prostitution of the law at the hands of miserable Cox. One has failed, but there are thousands who have yet to fail. Beware the President Garfield avengers."

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Senator Beck will offer a resolution at an early day calling upon the Judiciary Committee to report to the Senate what legislation is necessary to carry out the provisions of the Constitution in regard to the presidential succession, and to define what constitutes inability on the part of the President, and how such inability shall be determined. Mr. Beck will make use of the letter of Mr. D. F. Murphy, the Senate stenographer, which was sent last October, detailing the history of the subject before the convention which framed the Constitution, and the subsequent debates and opinions of eminent statesmen on that question. Mr. Murphy has added to the letter valuable information that he did not know of at the time he wrote the letter.

THE SUPREME COURT.

The law requires six Justices of the Supreme Court to make a quorum. The death of Justice Clifford, the absence of Field in Europe, and the incapacity of Hunt just leave a quorum for the transaction of business. Recently a Western railroad case came up in which Matthews had been retained as counsel previous to his going on the bench. This, in accordance with the rules of the court, would have left the court without a quorum. Judge Hunt, who is incapacitated for work of any kind, was brought up to the conference-room, and the Chief-Justice announced the decision of the court as not having been participated in by Mr. Justice Mathews, but concurred in by Mr. Justice Hunt, thus retaining a quorum. It is made a good deal of talk among members of the bar as to whether an invalid member of the court simply coming to the conference-room can give an opinion. Justice Hunt had not heard any of the arguments, had not appeared in court, and was not on the bench when the opinion was delivered."

The cross-examination of the assassin was continued Thursday and Friday. The examination was conducted by Judge Porter and was severe and searching. The general impression is that the prisoner damaged his case a great deal. Judge Porter's toasting fork placed him in an uncomfortable position throughout. Now excited, angry, insolent, mocking, mimicking, and again sullen, silent, scowling. He writhed on the chair in the witness-box, growing more and more uncomfortable every moment. His miserable body is so small that his repulsive face barely appears above the rail of the witness-box. His clasped hands and his changeful face evidenced the agitation which possessed him as Judge Porter put question after question in his skillful vivisection.

The close of the examination on Thursday left the witness pale and exhausted, his mind was excited and his general appearance that of a whipped hound. On Friday as soon as the jurors had responded to their names, Judge Porter returned to his work. In ten minutes he had once more confused and confounded the assassin. The latter became excited. Every question about his inspiration was another red rag of insult in the diseased fancy of the assassin. He saw, with his usual shrewdness, that Porter was getting out of him fact after fact which were contradicting the statements of his own witnesses, and even himself.

Guiteau stood at bay. Judge Porter was investigating his alleged inspiration. He was obliging him, with Judge Cox's assistance, to make damaging admissions about other alleged inspirations. He was wringing from him the acknowledgement that this paragraph and that paragraph in his "Continuation of the New Testament" was inspired, not by God, but by John H. Noyes. He was proving him, by comparison, a plagiarist from that distinguished prophet's writings. He was drawing from him as though he was on the rack, the story of his preparations for the "removal" of the president, of his watchings and waitings of his movements in detail as he hastened faster and faster down the narrow lane of fate which ended at the Baltimore & Potomac depot.

He was tortured by his consciousness that he was betraying himself, as well as by the exasperating way in which Judge Porter did his work. He was at times, as on Thursday, very impudent in his replies to Judge Porter. He did not hesitate in his exasperation to mimic him, to snarl at him, to refuse "to discuss" with him any longer the subject matter of the questions propounded by him. His affectation of contemptuous ease when displeased with the questioner, at one—he turned half around in his chair, adjusted a newspaper from the pile before him, and, placing a new pair of eyeglasses on his nose, solemnly pretended to read its columns—was very amusing. It is almost needless to say that Judge Porter was not annoyed by the witness. The re-direct examination was short and did little to strengthen the direct examination.

The first witness Saturday was Col. J. O. P. Burnside, disbursing officer of the postoffice department, who formerly lived in Freeport, Ill. He knew the prisoner's family. Mrs. Guiteau was an invalid.

Charles C. Allen, of Missouri, lived in Freeport in 1839 and 1840; knew the Guiteau family; Mrs. Guiteau was in feeble health.

Emery A. Storrs, of Chicago, knew Guiteau in that city by sight as a young lawyer. Saw him perhaps a dozen times at the national republican committee rooms in New York during the late presidential canvass. The prisoner came up to him gleefully, and patting him on the shoulder, said: "You are on the right track." Witness never saw Guiteau doing anything at the committee rooms other than reading the papers. He seemed to have no especial employment. In April saw the prisoner at Washington; he said he was going to have the Austrian mission. Witness told him the place was an important one, and in Blaine's department, and that he (Blaine) was known as a politician. The prisoner replied he was "solid with Blaine." Witness thought the conversation was leading up to a request for him (witness) to visit Blaine in Guiteau's interest, and forstalled it by saying that his relations with Blaine were such that he could not possibly aid him (the prisoner) any. Witness had formed an opinion as to Guiteau's mental size but could not express an opinion as to his sanity or insanity. His impression was that "Guiteau had an ill-balanced mind; in common parlance, he did not have good common sense." Witness was asked in relation to the political status just prior to the shooting of President Garfield, if there were not elements of discord in the republican party which threatened to disrupt it. The reply was: "I think the republican party a pretty difficult one to disrupt, and while there were elements of discord, my belief in the good sense of the rank and the file is such that I think it would have held together.'

Upon cross-examination witness said he "never saw anything in Guiteau to indicate that he could not distinguish between right and wrong." Never saw anything in the conduct of the prisoner that would indicate that he did not know the difference between guilt and innocence. Never saw anything to indicate that he would not be responsible for crime.

Mr. Scoville noted several exceptions to the rulings of Judge Cox in favor of the admission of these replies. The evidence created quite a stir in the court-room, and seemed to stagger those about the defense table. The sister of the prisoner was particularly affected, and in tones distinctly caught by the reporters, said: "He has perjured himself. That is all there is about it."

Edward Daniels testified to Guiteau's peculiar religious views, and his impression was that he was crazy.

Senator Dav. Davis was next examined. Said he was not connected with either of the political parties of the country. Knew there were factions in the Republican party. The only way to disrupt the Republican party was the disruption of the Democratic party. Did not think the success of any political party would imperil the success of the Republic. Thought the Southern people the last in the world to desire to go into any war.

Senator Davis said, with some asperity, he knew nothing about Guiteau and could not comprehend why he was subpœnaed to which Scoville replied that the reason would be stated in the argument.

Bailey, the District Attorney's stenographer, was put upon the stand, and Guiteau became at once excited. He charged the witness with coming to him as a New York Herald reporter and tricking him into an interview, the notes of which were used by the District Attorney. Bailey afterward made up a report from his notes for the New York Herald, and Guiteau wanted to know what he received for it. It was finally brought out that Bailey had been given $500. The prisoner was worked up considerably, and contradicted the witness, accusing him of perpetrating a fraud upon him.

Scoville wanted Bailey's notes, but the latter said they had been destroyed.

Bailey denied emphatically that he represented himself to Guiteau as a Herald correspondent or tricked him in any way.

The prisoner read a list of names of persons he wanted subpœnaed to show the political condition of the country last spring. The names were President Arthur, General Grant, ex-Senators Conkling and Platt, Messrs. Jewell, Robertson, and Dorsey, and Senators Jones and Logan; also Bennett, of the Herald, Reid, of the Tribune, Jones of the Times, Dana, of the Sun, and Hurlburt, of the World; Gorham, of the Washington Republican; Hutchinson, of the Washington Post, and William Penn Nixon, of the Inter Ocean.

Mr. Scoville said he had issued a subpœna for President Arthur, but did not care to have him summoned until he had seen him personally, and had directed the Marshal to that effect.

After this Scoville resumed the reading of the clippings, and, there being no other witnesses, the court adjourned.

Guiteau was late in arriving at the court-house Monday morning. An immense crowd lined the sidewalks, and upon alighting from the van the assassin evinced unusual trepidation, and begged the officers to take him around to the back entrance. He was assured that his escort was ample for his safety, and, with trembling steps and cringing gait, quietly shuffled through the angry crowd. Abject fear was depicted on his countenance, and it was several minutes after he reached the room in the building before he regained his usual composure.

Dr. Kennon of the Chicago Medical Review believed in moral insanity in certain rare cases, rendering a man irresponsible. Witness based his judgment of Guiteau's insanity upon hereditary taint, upon the impairment of judgment, upon exaltations of the emotions, and upon inspiration, which also included motive. Witness admitted that when a man committed crime while acting under the delusion of Divine inspiration, and then conducted himself precisely as a criminal would do, it would be presumptive evidence against his sanity.

Guiteau asked him with an air of great seriousness: "Doctor, I want to ask you where the hereditary nimbus of the brain exists; won't you show it whenever there is cause?"

Witness responded in the affirmative.

"That will do," said Guiteau, with the air of a lawyer who had made a decided point. Recess.

Col. R. J. Hinton formed the idea that Guiteau was a decidedly ill-balanced cranky egotist. His expression excited Guiteau who broke in. "I am not a fool. Scoville cannot prove me to be a fool. I would rather be hanged as a man than acquitted as a fool. Putting such a man on the stand is an insult to me. If you [talking to Scoville] had not put David Davis on the stand it would have been better. I thought you were a smarter lawyer than you are."

Chas. H. Nichols superintendent of the Bloomingdale Asylum testified that Guiteau was a fit subject for a lunatic asylum. Drs. Golding, McBride, Channing and Fisher testified that if Guiteau at the time of shooting believed himself inspired he was insane.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

DEC. 5.—The senate was called to order at noon. After the swearing-in of Senator Windom and the appointment of the usual committees to notify the president and the house, a very large number of bills were introduced. Mr. Garland introduced one for the appointment of a commission to investigate the questions of tariff and revenue laws; Mr. Logan, one to place Gen. Grant on the retired list of the army, and a large number of others. Mr. Logan presented a petition from army officers for the retirement of all officers after forty-five years of service. A resolution by Mr. Ferry, touching the protection of innocent users of patented articles, was laid over one day, under the rules.

Senator Edmunds offered a resolution reviving and continuing the committees as they existed at the close of the last session.

Senator Edmunds made a point of order that this resolution was not in accordance with the rules of the senate. Without a decision, both the resolution and the point of order went over until to-morrow, and the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

DEC 5.—A great crowd gathered to witness the opening of the first regular session of the XLVIIth congress. The roll-call showed 290 representatives present. The nominations for speaker being declared in order, Robeson nominated Keifer; House, Randall; and Murch, Ford. Out of a total vote of 285, Keifer received 148; Randall, 129, and Ford, 8. Mr. McPherson was elected clerk of the House. Mr. Hooker, sergeant at arms, and Rev. L. D. Power, chaplain. The speaker appointed Messrs. Hiscock, Orth and Egan to inform the president that the House was now in session and ready to receive any communication he might make. At 5:20 the House adjourned.

THE Gardener's Monthly, for December has arrived. It contains a very interesting biographical notice of John Jay Smith, the veteran horticulturist, and the address of President Wilder before the American Pomological Society. The departments are well filled as usual with miscellaneous matters.

Fitzsimmons, administrator, of said estate alleging, among other things that he is ready to file his final account in this court, and praying for the allowance of said account and for an assignment and distribution of the residue of said estate according to the statute in such case made and provided and for his discharge.

Thereupon it is ordered, That Monday, the 9th day of January next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing. It may interest many people whom adverse fate has doomed to a residence near that wheezy old railroad known as the Michigan Air line to know that its freight rates for the year covered by the railroad commissioner's latest report was higher than those of any other road in the state, being 3.45 cts. per ton per mile, the average rates in in the state being 0.86 cents.

Paying in Chickens.

There is an article going the rounds of the papers relating how a man went to Moore, editor of the Rural New Yorker, and said that he was too poor to take a paper. The following is the gist of the story:

Mr. Moore said, "You raise chickens, I believe?"

"Yes, a few; but they don't bring anything hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything hardly. Now, I have a proposition to make to you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from your lot one chicken and call her mine. Take good care of her, and bring me the proceeds a year from now, whether in eggs or chickens, and we will call it square."

"All right, Brother Moore," and the fellow chuckled at what he thought a capital bargain. He kept the contract strictly, and at the end of the year found that he had paid about four prices for his paper.

We allude to this to warn newspaper men not to adopt the plan, when some farmer grumbles about paying for his paper. Don't never enter into such a bargain with a farmer. We know, when paper is high, editors are liable to take their pay in truck, and the above article looks so plausible that some poor country editor may think there's millions in it, and he will go to speculating in chickens that way. But we warn them that they are liable to get left. We tried it there once at La Crosse. Uncle Eliakin Barlow came in one day and said our paper didn't amount to a string of suckers, and he would be tetotally gumsquizzled if he would take it any longer unless he could pay in trade. He sold milk and kept chickens. We could get milk, but Eliakin was always playing common cow's milk for his "Jersey cow's" milk, so we concluded to suggest this chicken dodge that Moore tried with such good effect. We wanted to teach him a lesson, so we told him to go home and pick out a chicken and call it ours, and give us the proceeds, in two years from date, whether it was eggs or chickens. He bit like a bass. He said he would do it, by the great jewhillikins. So he went his way and we went ours. Many a time during the two years did we estimate the amount of poultry that would be ours. We built a hen-coop and got ready to go into the hen business. The day the two years were up we drove out to Eliakin's place to take an account of stock. Eliakin was milking a "Jarsey" cow, there near the pump, and he said when he got through "stripping" he would show us our property. Well, after a while he got up off his milking stool, kicked a little rheumatiz out of his hind leg, and said:

"Come around the barn, you redheaded financier. You middle man, you monopoly, come here."

He took us into a yard, and there were at least 100 hens. We looked at them with astonishment. Pointing to a sickly-looking yellow fowl, with one leg froze off, and which looked as though it hadn't life enough to pick up an angle worm after a hen had scratched it up for him, Barlow said:

"There, that are cussed yellow rooster is the one I picked out for you. He never has laid an egg, and has never had sand enough to associate with the rest of the chickens, and he never has increased any. How much have you made on this trade?"

We hope to be hornswoggled if it wasn't true, and the rooster wasn't worth 4 cents. And, to make the matter worse, Eliakin presented a bill to us of $4.80 for corn our rooster had eaten in the two years. It is needless to say we have demanded cash of our subscribers since. No, young man—you who are fresh in the newspaper business—don't never try to get ahead of one of these Grangers on a chicken trade. Moore may have had a she hen assigned to him, but it would not occur once in a thousand times, at least it wouldn't out West here.—Peck's Sun.

Our Breakfasts.

The American's breakfast bill of fare is varied but little: beefsteak fried or baked potatoes, griddle cakes with syrup, or hot waffins and biscuit, are the articles he sighs for and will have, despite the threatenings of dyspepsia. Across the water, they shudder at the American breakfast, while they discuss their chocolate, delicate rolls, soft-boiled eggs and fruit, with appetite. To those accustomed to more hearty food, it seems at first sight as if it would be impossible to accomplish the work or half the day upon a breakfast of rolls, eggs and chocolate; yet after one has become accustomed to the habit, it is difficult to partake of a more substantial meal early in the day without discomfort. And surely a breakfast of chocolate, rolls—fresh baked, but not hot—oatmeal, eggs and fruit, is fit for a king. It is varied, nutritious, delicate and easy to digest, and it contains nothing fried. If we could only banish the saucepan's contents from our breakfast-table, and bring up our children equally to dread Satan and shun that which is fried! How many little ones in this free land, after cheerfully munching their crisp, greasy potatoes, and hot fried pork or beefsteak, enter the school-room to fall into all kinds of trouble. Their brains are disorganized by the indigestible food they have eaten. If we should feed them upon milk, oatmeal, and such nourishing things in the morning, with plenty of rare, broiled beefsteak at noon, they might not develop immediately into little angels, perhaps, but they certainly would have rosier cheeks and brighter minds. The question of what one shall eat is inexhaustible, however, and every one has a different opinion concerning it. It is the business of the housewife to know something about the subject from a chemical standpoint, and to regulate the dinners of her family so that they may not only be palatable but healthful. Pies, puddings, rich pastry of all kinds, in fact, should always be tabooed in a family where there are no children, but after these are denied a diet may be described which is at once wholesome and appetizing. There is a great deal in the manner of preparing food to render it harmless. For instance, the oyster, either boiled, stewed, or raw, is the most easily digested of edibles; but fried, it stands revealed as the father of nightmares. Yet, such is the contrariness of human nature, most people perfer it fried! Few of us can resist a dish of crisp, smoking oysters thus prepared, even at breakfast time, though it be much more virtuous to eat a buttered roll. An unruly appetite leads us into all manner of trouble.

A country doctor, being asked what was the cure to a ham, remarked that before answering that question he should want to know what ailed the ham.

"Brilliant and impulsive people," said a lecturer on physiognomy, "have black eyes, or if they don't have 'em, they're apt to get them, if they're too impulsive.

On an old English tombstone is the following: "Here lies the body of Mary Bent; Kicked up her heels and away she went."

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

A pretty sheep is dear to me,
A hare with downy hair;
I love a hart with all my heart,
But barely bear a bear.
'Tis plain that no one takes a plane
To have a pair of pears;
A rake, though, often takes a rake
To tear away the tares.
All rays raise thyme, times rates all;
And, through the whole, hole wears.
A writer writing "right" may write
It "wright," and still be wrong—
For "wright" and "rite" are neither "right,"
And don't to write belong.
Beer often brings a bier to man,
Coughing a coffin brings;
And too much ale will make us ail
As well as other things.
The person lies who says he lies
When he is but reclining;
And, when consumptive folks decline,
They all decline declining.
A quail don't quail before a storm—
A bough will bow before it;
We can not rein the rain at all—
No earthly powers reign o'er it.
The dyer dyes awhile then dies;
To dye he's always trying,
Until upon his dying bed
He thinks no more of dying.
A son of Mars mars many a son;
All days must have their days,
And every knight should pray each night
To him who weighs his ways.
'Tis meet that man should mete out meat
To feed misfortune's son;
The fair should fare on love alone,
Else one can not be won.
Alas, alas! is something false;
Of faults a maid is made;
Her waist is but a barren waste—
Though stayed, she is not staid.
The springs spring forth in spring, and shoots
Shoot forward one and all;
Though summer kills the flowers, it leaves
The leaves to fall in fall.
I would a story have commence,
But you might find it stale;
So let's suppose that you have reached
The tail end of our tale.

Hints to Stammerers.

I commenced operations by writing out a very large number of ordinary sentences, as they present themselves. Having examined these sentences one by one, and knowing well where I should fail in uttering them as they stood, I sought to devise some method by which those consonant initials might be got rid of, or at all events, diminished. It struck me that if I could contrive, by any artificial division of the words comprising each sentence, instead of at the commencement, a grand object would be thus achieved, for consonants at the end of a word present no special difficulty, the glottis having been already opened by the preceding vawel sounds, the terminating consonant flows out almost as a matter of course. It is as when we pour liquid from a full bottle. At first it runs intermittently with "glok-gluk," but when once enough of the liquid is out to admit the air freely the obstruction ceases. In a similiar way the object of the stammerer is to prevent the glottis from closing when once it is opened. To ascertain whether or not my idea was practicable, I wrote out in the ordinary way one sentence at a time. I then re-wrote this sentence, not divided into simple words, but making every initial consonant the final letter of the preceding word. Having so divided the words composing the sentence, I then read them over aloud many times, acording to this artificial division, to try if they were pronouncable without any gross peculiarity. I practiced this method incessantly, both in reading and colloquial speaking; and to my astonishment, I discovered within a few weeks that I was wielding an instrument which was almost invariably successful; and with this consciousness of increased power my confidence daily increased, so that I could frequently speak on without regard to any method. All who had known me up to this time were perfectly astonished and anxiously inquired by what means so remarkable a change had been effected: for mine, be it observed, was no mere occasional hesitation, but a most habitual, unmistakable and inveterate stammering. Shortly after this change, I had numerous transactions, which involved a large amount of talking, with a gentleman occupying a somewhat superior position, and, being anxious to know whether the working of my mental machinery was at all observable to outsiders, I asked him whather he had ever observed any peculiarity in my speaking. His reply was: "No; only that you speak very distinctly."—Chambers' Journal.

Copper.

Everybody knows the weight and value of an ordinary penny-piece, and that it is principally composed of copper; so that if any one were to find a great lump of that metal in the earth, weighing 420 tons, there would be a fine fortune. Such a mass of pure native copper was found in the Minnesota mine in 1857, and it was forty-five feet long, twenty-two feet broad, and eight feet thick. There is a piece of copper in the museum of Lisbon which came from Peru, and it weighs 2,616 pounds; and near Brunswick, in New Jersey, there was a thin sheet of pure copper found in the rocks which could be traced for several yards. There are some very profitable mines near Lake Superior, between Canada and the United States, which often yield 3,000 tons a year of pure copper, and in 1853 a great lump of copper was found at Keweenaw Point, which weighed 200 tons, and was forty feet in length. It contained, moreover, much silver, and when the copper was cut and polished it looked very beautiful. In most parts of the world small pieces of pure copper have been found in cracks in the hardest rocks; and man, soon after he turned his attention to a civilized life, began to use copper. Then he mixed it with tin and produced weapons of bronze, which were used for a very long period before iron was discovered. The early natives of North America, like all others, first of all used sharpened stones as their knives and spear-heads, but they soon began to make use of the yellow metal they found every now and then amongst the rocks. They even tried to find copper, and obtained it from the mines on Lake Superior, for the present miners come upon the old diggings whilst working in places where gigantic trees and dense vegetation must have existed for thousands of years. Copper is usually found combined with other substances to form an ore, and this has to be burned and run into shapes before the pure copper is obtained. It is most probable that all copper, and even the great lumps of pure native copper, were once in the form of ore, or combined with other substances. Native copper is found close to rocks which are exactly like the lava and slag which are cast out of volcanoes. These rocks were forced into the earth whilst in a molten state, and their intense heat affected the copper ores close by. The substances combined with the copper to form the ore were destroyed by the heat, and the pure metal remained.

"Keep to the write," said the lawyer to his lazy clerk.

Female economy—buying a half-dollar straw hat, then putting eleven and a half dollars' worth of trimming on it.—Hartford Sunday Journal.

When a Cincinnati man speaks of the productions of his pen, you never know whether he is a literary feller or a hog-raiser.—Boston Transcript.

Who can arrest a calumnious tongue, or who can stop the consequences of calumnious misrepresentations? You may refute it, you may trace it to its source and expose its authors, you may sift every atom, explain, annihilate it, and yet, like Greek fire, it remains unquenched and unquenchable; or like weeds, which, when extirpated in one place, sprout forth vigorously in another spot. Half-truths are often more calumnious than whole falsehoods. Not a word may be uttered, but a half-suppressed innuendo, a dropped lip, an arched brow, a shrugged shoulder, a significant look, an incredulous expression of countenance, nay, even an emphatic silence, may do the fiendish work; and when the light and trifling thing which has done the mischief has fluttered off, the venom is left behind to work and rankle and fester, to inflame hearts, to fever human experience, and to poison human society at the fountain springs of life.—F. W. Robertson.

Dear Boy.

Father had gone over to the next township to a committee meeting, and had taken mother with him, so Dorcas and I had the whole care of Mabel, a pleasure that did not often fall to us. She was sitting in her little rocker, with the white kitten in her lap and one little red cheek pressed against my knee, as she looked in my face while I read. Dorcas was sewing as usual, but more interested in the reading than Mabel, who could not understand a word. Dorcas was twelve, and had never read Jane Eyre, and I was tired of telling her the story in snatches. We were half through the book, and as I read to the passage where she comes to St. John's door, Dorcas laid her work down to listen. I had reached the climax where the old servant closes the door upon her, and St. John appears on the scene and speaks as one having authority.

At this supreme moment there came a sudden, loud and peculiar knock at the door, so close to me that I involuntarily caught Mabel, while Dorcas seized a chair and stood in a pugilistic attitude, with a face as white as snow. I was the first to rally—I am nineteen—for I felt that the home was left in my care, so I roused up old Susan, who was asleep in the kitchen, and we asked cautiously through the panels who was there, but received no answer but a low moan, and I felt sure it was some one in distress, so I opened the door, a little bit at a time, and at last looked out, but could see nothing.

"Who or what speaks?" I asked, terrified at the unexpected sound, and incapable now of deriving from any occurrence a hope of aid. A form was near—what form, the pitch-dark night and my enfeebled vision prevented me from distinguishing. With a loud long knock the new-comer appealed to the door.

The wind whirled the dead leaves in great heaps and sifted them over the door step; there was a mound of them lying there, and under it something stirred. My heart gave a great bound.

"Bring the light Susan!"

Old Susan brought the light, shading it with her hand. I stooped, trembling all over, and touched something; it gave a moan and sat up!

It was only a boy, after all; a poor, sick, wasted, small boy, that seemed to be starving. We carried him into the house, and tried to make him talk, but he did not seem to understand what we said, and moaned and cried as if in great pain.

"What shall we do with him?" I asked, in despair. "I do wish father would come, he will have to stay all night now, so you may as well put him in the little room, Susan, and make him comfortable, poor little fellow!"

He was such a pretty boy, even in rags and sickness; he was so thin that his bones actually seemed worn through, and his great black eyes stared frightfully; he was too sick to hold his head up, and Susan carried him into the little corner room and undressed him as she would a baby, while Mabel stood by the door and said "pitty boy," in her small bird-like voice.

When father and mother came home we met them at the door, and Dorcas and I both tried to tell the story at the same time.

"Well," said father, sternly, "as I understand it, you have taken in a lazy tramp, who, when we are all fast asleep, will get up and let his friends in to rob and murder."

Mother had disappeared in the bedroom. Now she came out and said:

"He is very ill, indeed, Jephtha. It would not surprise me if he died before morning. He is burning up with fever."

"Small-pox, most likely," observed father.

"Maybe its diphtheria," cried mother in alarm. "Oh, girls! how could you? Just think of Mabel!"

"Should we have left him out there to die?" asked Dorcas.

"Tain't nothing but a cold," said old Susan. "He's only starved to death; besides, you hain't no need to fear. Some yarb tea and a night's rest 'ill fetch him 'round all right."

He had the "yarb" tea and many a long night's rest, but he never was any better; as Susan would say, "Nothin' but starvin' did it;" but he had starved a little too long. Nature did not reassert herself, and "Boy," as we called him, could not take hold again on the life he had so nearly dropped.

"It ain't in him," said old Susan, "'pears like he gets whiter and whiter every day."

At first, while he seemed like a sick boy tramp, we all kept away from him, except mother, who took the best of care of him; then one by one we drifted in to see how he was getting along, and at last the little corner bed-room was our general rendezvous, and Boy sitting up, white and wasted, its center of attraction. We knew from the first he would never get well, and we tried to find his friends, but he seemed to be alone in the world. This much we could see for ourselves, he was of genteel blood, and had been used to home care, but he spoke a foreign tongue and but little of that. All day he would sit bolstered up, and play with wan fingers with Mabel's toys, and when we found that his sickness was not contagious we used to put our darling on the little bed, where she would sit and talk to him in her baby lingo by the hour. She was such a happy child, it seemed as if she charmed pain away with her cooing baby fondness. The first thing in the morning it was "boy" or "pitty boy" and the last hour of her bedtime, when she would kneel with his thin hand in her soft curls and say her little make-believe prayer that we taught her, she would lisp "dear boy."

But there came a night when Boy seemed loth to have her go, and clung to the little dimpled hand, and kissed it with pale, cold lips, and then she threw both little arms about his neck, and in her pretty, beseeching tone, said, "By-by, dear boy."

It was her first whole sentence, and we were so proud, and she was to say it again to him the first thing in the morning, but when we took her in to see "dear boy,"

"He had gone home at evening,
And found it morning there."

Poor Mabel! she did not know (do any of us know?) what had changed her little smiling friend, who always reached out glad hands to her, into that death-white marble, and she looked at it wonderingly, with unrecognizing eyes, but when we took him away she looked on sadly, and no sweeter hymn was sung for him than her softly-murmured "By-by, dear boy," as she watched them bear him away.

We buried him in our own lot in the cemetery—selfish kindness—because Mabel loved him so, and over his grave we raised a simple memorial; no name; no age, only this:

"By-by, Dear Boy."

I have taken Mabel up there several times, but she only played with the dead rustling leaves, and she never seems to think of him now. Happy children! they so soon forget.

I wrote all this a year ago. Oh, can it be "only one year, one little year," and now there is another grave by that of "dear boy's," a little grave, only half so long"

"You'd scarcely think so small a thing Could leave a loss so large."

Oh, Mabel! Mabel! by-by, darling. Just before she went to sleep she lifted her heavy eyes—those sweet violet eyes we all loved so much—and murmured something we could not hear. I bent down close; close, for oh, I knew then our darling was going, and heard her say, as if to herself, "Dear boy," but in such a glad voice as if she saw him. And we thought she had forgotten! We had entertained angels unawares.—Detroit Free Press.

If contentment is happiness, it is better to be contented with a good deal than with a little.

The man who has no foolishness in his nature probably has something worse in the place of it.

We owe one half of our success in this world to some circumstance, and the other half to taking the circumstance on the wing.

Crime is the outgrowth of vice; to stop the former, you must weed out the later.

A cunning man is often shrewd but seldom wise. He sets so many traps for others that he generally gets into some of them himself.

Good breeding is so natural and easy that it can be taken for mere simplicity.

There is a kind of honesty that is nothing but fear, and a sort of patience which is nothing but laziness.

Coquetry is more natural to woman than prudery. A woman seldom outlives all of her coquetry, and never becomes a prude until she is obliged to.—Scribner's Bric-a-brac.

Hard wear—Tight boots.

A sweet craft—Courtship.

A wrathful land—Ire land.

Always striking for wages—A blacksmith.

The rule of three—Wife, mother-in-law and maiden aunt.

Unwelcome settlers—Those who offer ten cents on the dollar.

Cyprus is about as large as Connecticut. If anything Connecticut is a nutmeg greater.

A New York scribe has discovered that "N. B." attached to the postscript of a Boston invitation to dinner means "No Beans."

One of the first requisitions received from a newly appointed railway station agent was: "Send me a gallon of red oil for the danger lanterns."

You may have seen a young man on one side of a gate and a maiden on the other side. Why they talk so long is because a great deal may be said on both sides.

"Fifty thousand unmarried women are wanted at once in Arizona and no questions asked," says the N. H. Register. Then they won't go. Nothing but the promise that at least one question will be asked will fetch them.

"Never mind—never mind," said a hopeful democrat; "fraud, it is true, has again succeeded, but, remember, the children of Israel were forty years in the wilderness." "Yes, I know," said his interlocutor, "but, blast it, the other fellows didn't meantime have all the post offices!"

Dr. Hastings, of Roston, said he would as soon think of hiring some man to eat his breakfast as to hire some one to do his singing in church. According to his view, singing is the natural expression of religious joy. It may be so to the singer; but is it fair—is it Christian-like—to those that can't sing?

The Man Wich Didn't Drink Wotter.

Once there was a man wich didn't bleeve in drinkin wotter cos heed tuk a noshun into his hed that wotter was weeknin to the body, so he drank logger beer all of the time and told everybody that was the way to be a sentinarian. ROME.

Just at present the natives are all absorbed in the discussion of the horse problem, which is as follows: A sells his horse for $90, buys him back for $80 and sells him again for $100. How much and where does he gain. The argument arises as to where he gains, some claiming A gains $10 when he buys him back, others that he gains nothing till the horse is sold for more than he cost. A correct solution might prove a boon to the natives of this place by saving some from derangement, mental or physical.

The party given by the club here was a success every way. They will repeat it Dec. 9th. All are invited.

THE Methodist church of this village and other churches here have been greatly annoyed for some months by young men gathering in the vestibules and standing around the doors during the hours of service. No attempt has been made to reform this, simply because of the difficulty in the way of detection. Three weeks ago last Sabbath evening quite a disturbance was created by a number of young men during the time of service at the M. E. church. Fortunately two of them were detected, complaint was made before Justice Burridge and warrants for arrest were made out. The young men (whose names are witheld from the public) appeared before the justice, who read the warrant for their arrest to them. The Justice, on the recommendation of the representative of the Board of Trustees of the church, did not issue the warrant for their arrest, but released them on their promise of good behavior, giving them to understand that the warrant will be served on their first failure to keep the peace. The church will send in a petition to the common council to pass an ordinance prohibiting young men from standing around the doors of the places where divine service is being held. This action on the part of the M. E. church will meet with the hearty support of all lovers of good order and decency.

A Trip to Clinton.

We made a flying trip to Clinton, last Saturday afternoon just to see if the town was all there and everything going right. We dropped in to Silver's store long enough to see John Ed. McCollum, who has charge there. Called on E. W. Freeze who has a larger stock of goods in his line than was ever before brought to Clinton. Looked in upon the reliable firm of John Smith & Sons, smoked a good cigar with Vet Erskine, who is now running a model hotel up there, passed the time of day with Frank Muir, who is as happy as ever, saw Frank McClure taking a stitch in a harness for some unfortunate man who had a break down, met Sam. Babcock, the new barber on his way to the postoffice, took a message for a Tecumseh firm from Brainbridge & Hause, shook hands with D. Keyes, John Smith, Ed. Clark, Jim Eddy, Pat. Murphy, Tony Roper, Oc. Palmer, Geo. Freese, Frank Lancaster, and a host of others. Looked through the window upon Postmaster Rose, By. Randall, Demuth & Bush, and Peter Jacob. Made Bro. Field a short call and came home on the P. M. train, happy.

THE Adrian Times says: A good many people, whose judgment is valuable, believe a gas well could be struck here that would provide gas enough for heat and motive power for the whole city.

Why not tap the newspaper offices? If that source fails, then dig a well.

L. F. WHEELER has been at work for some time upon new scenery for the play of Evangeline to be produced at the Olympic theater in Chicago.—The play was brought out the first week in December. The statement appears on their bills and programs that every scene has been newly painted expressly for that play by L. F. Wheeler. It is a rare thing for a scenic artist to receive such a compliment, and it shows that he has already taken a commanding position in Chicago as a scenic painter.

ROBERT CAMPSEY of the Adrian Press was circulating round among his Tecumseh friends last Monday.

Do not forget the entertainment at the Opera House next Monday evening. It will be the finest of the season.

SATURDAY evening, Dec. 10, Oliver Dowd Byron will appear at the Adrian opera house in his celebrated play, "Across the Continent."

M. L. SQUIRE, of Toledo, has opened a new meat market in the store formerly occupied by Wm. Gaston as a grocery store. He seems to be a live man and we wish him success.

Two unsuccessful attempts to wreck a train have been made between Britton and Holloway, within a few days, by placing wood and rails on the track. Detectives are working the matter up.

ADRIAN has the good fortune to secure "The Harrisons," one of the best comedy companies now traveling. They appear there next Monday evening in the most humorous play of the season, "Photos."

RICHARD CALDWELL will sell his entire stock of furniture, consisting of bed-room sets, bedsteads, bureaus, wash stands, commodes, etc., at the opera house, on Saturday, Dec. 24. This will be a good chance to procure good furniture at a sacrifice.

WE call attention to the prospectus, in another column, of the Magazine of Art. This is one of the best publications of the kind now issued, and the subscription price is placed much below that of other similar works.—People who design taking an art magazine next year should examine this one before placing their subscription.

IT beats all. What? That every Uncle Tom's Cabin troupe draws a crowd. Last Monday evening the Opera House was literally packed to witness the second performance of that play this fall. At seven o'clock when the doors opened at least 400 people were congregated on the walk waiting to gain admission. The play was well put on, but no better than we have frequently seen it.

Adrian Record, Dec. 6: There was quite a large number of people attended the theater last evening from the surrounding towns in the county, expecting that the Lake Shore trains would be held until after the performance, but they were not, and all were compelled to stay until morning, several remaining in the depot during the night. A rather unpleasant experience we should judge.

A REPORT has gained circulation that Jas. B. Colvin had dismissed Dr. House, who has been attending upon Miss Josie Colvin, in her present severe illness. We are requested by Mr. Colvin, himself, to state that this report is wholly false. He has never had the remotest idea of dismissing Dr. House. The patient is still under his charge and is now improving with the chances very favorable for her ultimate recovery.

AT the Universalist church next Sunday forenoon, by request, sermon on Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus, from Acts 13th-9th Saul, who also was called Paul. Also in the evening, The wrathful imprecations of scriptures, and the calamities of nature, how consistent with the eternal goodness and the future salvation of mankind, from Matt. 23-33. Ye serpents, ye generations of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of Hell.

CIRCUIT COURT.

An adjourned term of the circuit court was opened Wednesday morning and a large amount of business was transacted it being confined to entering judgements in cases not contested, hearing motions, chancery arguments, etc. Among the most prominent of these was a motion to set aside preliminary proceedings in a garnishee case where Howard, of Toledo, is plaintiff and the firm of Williams, Clement & Co., of Blissfield are defendants. Mr. Watts for the motion contended that there was such jurisdictional defect as to make the proceedings void, while singularly enough Mr. Underwood was clearly of the opinion that everything was O. K.

In the case of Aviral Cross vs. Japhet Cross, where default had been entered, Willis Merritt asked for an order to let in T. J. Navin, the assignee to make a defence, with leave to plead by Tuesday. The court said on proper showing he would set aside the default and the attorney left to take the proper steps to get into court. Meanwhile Vial takes judgment for something near $10,000.

William H. Glenny and others vs. R. W. Ingals; judgment by default, for $124.99.

Wm. J. Clark and others vs. R. W. Ingals; judgment by default for $357.92.

Otto Young vs. Japheth Cross; judgment for $637.35.

Daniel Weil and others vs. Japheth Cross; judgement for $1,190.09.

A. Stevenson & Son vs. E. D. Gilkey; judgment for defendant for costs.

Henry Sizer vs. Allen G. Wells; judgment by default for $6,985.61.

Louis Hoeffler vs. Japheth Cross; judgment for $101.83.

Orson Knight and George Knight vs. Japheth Cross; judgment by default for $334.

May Merritt vs. Selah O. Merritt; decree for $500 alimony granted.

W. H. Waldby vs. A. H. Russell; in chancery. Order for appearance entered.

Several divorce cases were submitted for the judgment of the court.

John Brown vs. James Berry; order for security for costs entered.

John Brown vs. A. W. Slayton; similar order.

Nelson C. Weter, was examined by a committee and having passed a satisfactory examination was admitted to practice.

The argument in the case of Howard vs. R. G. White as garnishee was to set aside proceedings. It seems N. M. Howard sued the firm of Williams and Clement and garnisheed R. G. White. The affidavit was defective, and after disclosure Mr. Underwood asked and obtained leave to file a supplemental affidavit. In the meantime two or three other creditors garnisheed White, and their attorneys asked that the whole garnishee proceedings instituted by Howard be quashed for want of jurisdiction. The motion was argued all day and the court granted the motion. White disclosed that he owed the defendants $1,500, and as Howard's claim was over $2,000 it is safe to say that he sees this legal hole in the skimmer with no particular satisfaction.

Asenath McCarter vs. James McCarter; divorce decreedby reason of desertion and refusal to support.

Charlotte Older vs. Franklin B. Older; divorce granted, with possession of all personal property owned by both.

George Sparrow vs. The Lake Shore Railroad Co.; motion for a new trial argued and denied.

Alice Robinson vs. James Robinson. Divorce granted.

Anna Simmons vs. Charles Simmons. Divorce granted.—Press.

THE KNIGHT COMBINATION.

Next Monday evening, Dec. 12th, our people will have an opportunity to hear Alfred J. Knight's Lyceum Bureau Combination at the Opera House. This will be one of the finest entertainments of the season and should be well patronized. Below we give some fine press notices which will give a much better idea of the company than we could:

Mr. Knight's entertainment at Music Hall was a grand success, although the night outside was dark and rainy, the Knight inside was warm and cheerful.—Richmond Springs Mercury.

Mr. Knight is at home in whatever he undertakes; indeed he has so just a conception of his powers, and his versatility is so great, that he not undertake what he cannot do justice to.—Miami Gazette, Waynesville, O.

The costume recitals by Mr. Alfred J. Knight proved to be a rare treat.—The Death of Samson and the Schoolmaster's Guests were grand, as well as his personations of Shakspeare.—Providence, R. I., Journal.

As Richard III, Mr. Knight wore a superb dress of Metternich green silk, hat with feathers, doublet and hose, jewels, sword and tip boots. He spoke the Soliloquy with fine effect.—Bergen County Democrat.

Beer affects the Kidneys, and it may seriously interfere with the health, unless promptly counteracted, and for this purpose Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has no equal.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The Farmers' Club met at George Griswold's Dec. 1st. There was a good attendance and a very interesting meeting. This was the annual meeting for the election of officers, which resulted in the re-election of the old officers.

President—F. C. Rector.
Vice President—Mrs. G. Griswold.
Secretary—Mrs. F. C. Rector.

On motion the members were taxed ten cents each to defray expenses for the ensuing year.

The business ended, the following program was given:

Singing—Minnie Rector and Kittie Griswold.

Select Reading—Miss Fred Griswold. She gave a chip basket as a change from the usual routine.

Essay—Mrs. Geo. Griswold. She said she had intended to write upon housework but finding an article in the Grange Visitor that expressed her views she read that.

Inst. Music—Fred Griswold.

The subject for discussion; the best manner of wintering cattle and sheep, was opened by I. H. Schreder. He hoped to get information in regard to sheep as he had been out of the business for some years, and had bought some to winter. He thought good stabling of real importance in wintering cattle. It had been a question whether to feed hay when he had plenty of bright straw and good stalks with a small amount of grain. He would stable milch cows during the night and let them out days when pleasant. Give plenty of water. He had put up a wind-mill this season and hoped to furnish water in abundance. He wished to hear from the other members in regard to sheep.

Mr. Russell would rather learn than give information. He yards day times and stables nights, feeds mill feed and oil cake, and gives plenty of water.—Would not feed store sheep grain until near spring, but would feed hay at night and stalks mornings.

Mr. Schreder asked the expense of oil cake.

Mr. Russell answered $20 per ton, and thought it good economy to feed it with other feed, as he considered one pound worth two of mill feed; would feed one-tenth oil-cake to other feed. Would not feed much corn meal as he considered it poor economy.

Mr. F. Rector stables everything, feeds calves hay twice a day, also fatting cattle, milch cows and store cattle, feeds stalks in stable and straw in the yard during the day. Feeds sheep hay at night and straw in the morning, under shelter. Thinks stalks and straw with grain will give as good results and as good wool. He commenced feeding shelled corn, light in the beginning of winter and increases toward spring. Would keep them yarded from the commencement of winter, and shelter nights, and always when a storm. Gives access to water in the sheds at all times. He has been in the habit of giving them access to salt at all times, but this winter was going to salt them twice a week. Thinks it a good plan to feed sulpher quite often with the salt.

Mr. Benedict said Mr. Kies told him that he had observed that many fleeces of wool were light and not strong, while of sheep fed upon corn gave heavier and stronger wool and were also healthier sheep. He did not consider oats as good feed for sheep. The best success he had was in feeding cut stalks, feeding in racks, but does not think stalks would be good feed this year; thinks farmers will have to use discretion and perhaps feed more grain. He would give cattle good care and plenty to eat. Does not know much about mill feed as he had never used but very little, as he usually had oats to feed. He had given his attention to grain late years in place of stock raising.

Mr. Horton had no great experience in stock raising but believes in good care and warm stables, and would feed oat meal. He would feed corn to sheep all winter, commencing with a small allowance and increasing as winter advances. Thinks it pays in the wool to feed plenty of grain, and doubly pays in increase of stock. Does not feed salt but brines the straw three times a week.

Mr. Griswold had not had much experience, but had seen it stated that young stock taken at six months old and fed on hay and stalks alone would starve to death by the time they were three years old. He had found that those farmers that fed liberally, and gave plenty of corn to sheep were good economists. He would agree with those who kept their stock well stabled and watered.

Mr. R. B. Gillespie agrees with the other members in regard to care and warm quarters, and feeds hay, also liberally with corn meal and bran mixed. His milch cows he gives good feed, and does not lessen the feed because they are not in milk. He believes in being very gentle with cows and petting them a great deal. Thinks feeding on hay too expensive; would feed stalks, but this year stalks are of a poor quality and would feed more straw. Thinks sheep do better to run out days unless stormy. He thinks bran economical feed and thinks farmers cannot afford to be without it. Would prefer feeding corn whole than in meal, and considers it the best economy to feed liberally even if grain is high.

DIED.

MATHER—At the residence of his father, Tecumseh, Mich., Nov. 24th, of consumption, Charles B. Mather, aged 22.

The deceased was blessed with good health until about six years ago, when he was taken suddenly and dangerously ill. Medical skill and care, combined with his own fortitude undoubtedly prolonged his life. During these six years Charles has at times been convalescent, at other times brought very near the gates ajar. From the appearance of consumption, 8 months ago, it was a constant and close conflict with death. Affability, decision, energy were marked qualities in his character. When he knew the end was at hand, forec sting events, he set his affairs in or er arranged for the funeral obsequies and with an unfaltering trust in his aviour gathered up his feet in death, his father's God to meet.

A throng of his companions and friends, together with kindred and friends of the household assembled at the family residence, and with sorrowful hearts and bowed heads reverently listened to chosen words from Holy Scripture followed by the sweet songs of Zion, as also by an address from his pastor, and then all that was mortal of Charles B. Mather, was tenderly borne to their last resting place to swell the numbers in the pale city of our dead. Without fear, with light in the future before him and with strong desire that all his friends might meet him in Heaven, his chastened and ripened spirit passed calmly, triumpantly to God. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

"When the parted streams of life
Join beyond all jarring strife,
And the flowers that withered lay,
Blossom in eternal May;
When the voices hushed and dear,
Thrill once more the raptured ear,
We shall know, and feel and see
God knew better far than we."

When you buy at less price you lose in the quality of goods more than you save in price. When you find to a certainty the same quality of goods, you will find my prices as low or lower than others, for the reason that I pay cash for my goods, and give my customers the benefit of the discounts I get for cash. I have probably more goods in my line than all the other dealers in Adrian combined. Goods packed and sent with care on all railway routes. WOOD WANTED.

Nothing but Leaves.

When we put on our best dresses, or Sunday necktie, we are only making ourselves fine with mulberry leaves—mulberry leaves, however, that have been devoured and digested by a little, worm-like caterpillar, that many a fine lady would scream at the sight of, if it crawled on the silk itself had made.

Where mulberry-trees will not grow, silk-worms cannot live, for they eat the leaves day and night, and the faster they eat, the more silk they spin; so that the Chinese feed them every half-hour, day and night.

They spin the silk very much as the spider does its web, only, as they do not want to catch insects, but to protect themselves with it, the silk is spun round them in something of an egg-shapped mass, and is called a cocoon.

These cocoons are put into an oven, to kill the moths inside of them, and the coarse outside silk is taken off, which is what is called floss silk, and is carded and spun as cotton is.

Then the cocoons are put into warm water, until the ends of the silk loosen. It is so fine that a number of these ends are twisted together, and so wound into one thread, and then they are ready for the manufacturer to weave them.

When Alexander the Great conquered Persia, silks were brought home into Greece, though most boys know more about his horse Bucephalus than about the costly stuffs his conquest introduced. The Persians also supplied the Romans with silk, until one of the emperors grew angry at the price the merchants asked.

After many devices to get some of the eggs of the silk worm, two pilgrim monks concealed some of them in the hollow part of their staves. They also brought directions how the worms were to be fed and the threads manufactured; and that is the way silk was first introduced into Italy.

And now let us see what our country has to do with silk. There are some people who are not too young to remember when there was a great excitement in parts of the United States over silk-growing. Many rich men lavished a great deal of money in planting mulberry-trees, and poorer ones spent their all in the cultivation. Every one was sure of making a fortune.

A Frenchman, named D'Homergue had predicted that the United States would become a great silk-growing and silk-manufacturing country, and so many people went wild over the expectation that they ruined themselves. The morous multicorus speculation became a reproach and derision to those whose who put money in it.

But M. D'Homergue may not been such a bad prophet after all, for he never said when his prophecy would come to pass, only that it would.

And now in the United States the raising of silk is becoming a regular industry. Not long ago we had a letter from Louisiana, giving an interesting account of the busy little spinners there.

We can date back to the days of the colonies for the first silk raising. In 1656, Virginia is said to have made the cultivation "moderately thriving," and some loyal persons sent to Charles II. a royal robe, cover from silk raised in that colony.

Georgia tried the industry in 1732, and in 1759, 10,000 pounds of silk were sent to England from Savannah, and brought a famously good price.

South Carolina was not long behind her neighbor in the cultivation, and Connecticut was the first northern state to try what she could do, as she was also the first to raise tobacco, and some say she thrven wonderfully in producing nutmegs.

One day not long since, six freight-cars arrived in New York from San Francisco, on their way to France. They had come from Japan, and were full of cauds, on which were eggs of the silk-worms.

There has been a disease among the worms in in Europe, so Japan has been sending millions of dollars' worth of eggs—so tiny, not bigger than the head of a pin—to San Francisco, then over the Pacific Railroad, to sail from New York in a steamer to Europe. Is not that a big work for a little worm and a few mulberry-leaves to accomplish?

There is a moth called the Cynthia, which feeds on the leaves of the Ailanthus-tree, and which spins a silk that is very strong and durable. We call it pongee, and the Chinese, who manufacture it, call it wild silk. There may be many more of the beautiful wild moths which can be made useful in spinning for us.

FRIDAY TRAVELERS.—To the old superstition that Friday is an unlucky day for traveling still keeps people at home on that day, is proved by the experience of nearly every railway conductor. Of the passengers on the New York Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, 15 per cent. are carried on Friday, while there is an average of 17 per cent. carried on each of the other five week days. In other words, there is a falling off on Fridays of nearly one-eighth as compared with the average of other week days. The days of heaviest travel are approximately Monday with 19 per cent. and Saturday with 18 per cent., there being many persons going to and returning from business on those days. The percentage shown on other week days are: On Tuesday, 16 0/0; Wednesday, 15 0/0; Thursday 16, and Friday 15.

Temple of Diana of the Ephesians.

At Ephesus, the capital of the twelve Ionian cities in Asia Minor, stood this famous temple of Diana. The edifice was burnt down on the night in which Alexander was born. It was set fire to by Bratostratus, a native of Ephesus, with no other view than to immortalise his name. His townsmen, however, pessed a decree forbidding his name to be mentioned; nor would it soon have been known unless Theopampus had introduced it into his writings. Hence the incendiary has come down to our times as "the youth that fired the Ephesian dome."

Alexander made an offer to rebuild the temple, provided he could inscribe his name on the front, which the Ephesians refused. Aided, however, by the whole of Asia Minor, they erected a still more magnificent temple, which occupied them two hundred and twenty years. Pliny describes it as 425 feet by 220 broad. Chersiphorn was the architect. It was built of cedar, cypress, and even gold; and within it were treasured offerings to the goddess Diana, the value of which almost exceeded computation. Nero is said to have despoiled the temple of many of these treasures; but it existed until it was finally burnt by the Goths, A. D. 53—268. Vitruvius considers this temple as the first edifice in which architecture was brought to perfection, and the first in which the Ionic order was employed.

Ephesus, once the pride of Asia, is now represented by a poor village of a few cottages, and a castle and mosque built with fragments taken from the ruins of Ephesus, half a mile distant. The stadium, now converted into a corn-field, the theatre, the circus, and the magnificent gymnasium, may all be distinguished in outline, and their area is strewed with fine fragments. There is a particular part of the entablature of a Corinthian temple, which, in the richness and variety of its ornaments, as well as in their fine execution, has perhaps never been surpassed. But it is not without difficulty, and even doubt, that we can determine the spot where stood that proud boast of antiquity—the temple sacred to Diana of the Ephesians. All that constituted the splendor of this edifice—its columns, of which 127 were the gifts of kings, its works of art, comprising the masterpiece of Apelles and Praxiteles, and the one column sculptured by Scopas—have disappeared. After the great temple had been repeatedly pillaged by the barbarians, Justinian remoued the columns to adorn the church of St. Sophia, at Constantinople. The temple site can now be identified only by the marshy spot on which it was erected, and by the prodigious extent and magnitude of the arches raised as a foundation. The vaults formed by them compose a sort of labyrinth. There is not an apartment entire; but walls of immense blocks of marble, in the fronts of which are perforations wherein were sunk the shanks of the brass and silver plates with which the walls were faced—these, and shafts of columns, are all that remain of this splendid edifice, once pointed out as that which all Asia worshipped when the people cried out in their enthusiasm: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians, to whom such a temple belonged!"

Animal Doctors.

Certain animals, including especially the dog, horse, mule, elephant, and cat, but also the chimpanzee, orang, various apes or monkeys; the pike or other fishes; sheep and other animals, not unfrequently become voluntary patients, and sometimes notably patient or submissive, quiet and uncomplaining, as well as intelligent patients of the physician or surgeon. Not only so, but having themselves experienced the benefit of man's medical or surgical skill, they bring their young or their fellows as patients to him, and they co-operate with the physician or surgeon in his treatment, either by showing the patients what to do, or by compelling their acquiesence in man's arrangements for their behoof. As medical or surgical patients, moreover, some of the lower animals stand in the most favorable contrast to man—in respect, for instance, to their sagacity, self-control, fortitude, gratitude or other virtues that are brought into prominence by suffering and its relief. There are many instances of war or regimental elephants in India going regularly, day after day, of their own accord, to military hospitals, to get wounds dressed, usually after having been taken there once or twice by their mahouts. They submit themselves to any necessary operations, understand the surgeon's object and cooperate with him; express pain and relieve themselves by plaintive groans, though obviously regarding the infliction of pain as a necessary or unavoidable part of the operation, prepare themselves for suffering by drawing in the breath as a man does, recognize and put confidence in the surgeons' voices and persons as those of friends. Of an adult male elephant we are told, "That the surgeons might operate, he readily extended himself on the ground and bore with patience the application even of burning caustic. The acuteness of the pain would sometimes force from him a plaintive groan. But to the doctor, who by inflicting momentary torments, sought to accomplish his cure, he expressed the liveliest emotions of gratitude."

Original Labeling.

An old newspaper man from Ohio started a drug store in Detroit, and a local paper, commenting on his innovation, remarked that he would be a millionaire in three years or bust in six months. His store is very cheerful. Skulls, crucibles, forceps, chromos, false teeth, bones, almanacs, parrots and sticks of licorice scattered around in delightful profusion, and there is not a drawer or bottle without an original label. On one drawer he has: "Glue—she sticks right by you, no matter what the weather." On another: "Copperas—eat slow and chew fine." On another: "Paris green—sure in its operation, lasting in its effect." The label on one bottle reads: "Buy some of me and stop that blained cough." On another: "Prussic acid—don't stool around with a revolver." Hanging against the wall is a beautiful sign which reads: "If you don't want to ask for a fine-tooth comb, point your finger at me." At the back end of the store is a still larger sign, which bears the tender sentiment: "There is no flock without its missing lamb. Sometimes you find him in the bedstead. I keep the stuff to make him weary of life. Don't ask for bedbug poison—call it the Lost Lamb Restorative. I shall know what you mean." The front of the store bears some happy thoughts. Among them is one reading: "Walk right in here if you had buckwheat cakes for breakfast last winter." Another says: "I can cure that red nose in just fifteen days." A third reads: "You man with the catarrh, please step this way."

Everybody is using Brown's Iron Bitters, and everybody is astonished at its many marvelous cures where all others have failed.

No Excuse for Living a Single Life.

In Cincinnati they have organized a matrimonial insurance company, the plan of which we recommend to some of the unmarried. The plan is this:

Any person unmarried (including widows and widowers), of good character and reputation, regardless of age, may become members without submitting to a medical examination, but by simply paying the admission fee, dues and assessments. There will be three divisions of the company. The first division will entitle the members to a policy of $500, the second to $1,000, and the third $1,500. The dues, assessments and admission fees, of course, will differ accordingly. In the first division the admission fee is to be $5, the assessment not to exceed $1, and the yearly dues $3. Division No. 2 has a $10 admission fee, an assessment not to exceed $1.50, and yearly dues of $6. The third division has an admission fee of $15, an assessment not to exceed $2, and yearly dues of $9. Any member who marries before having been a member one year forfeits his right to membership. Whoever marries after the year's membership, but before having been in the association two years, shall receive half of the policy within sixty days, and the other half at the expiration of his second year's membership. All who have been members two years or more before marriage shall receive the entire amount within sixty days after depositing their marriage certificates with the company.

THE HIGHEST MOUNTAIN.—The highest mountain on the earth is Gaurisankes, in the eastern Himalayan district. It is 29,002 feet high. In this district there are thirty-four mountains over 20,000 feet in height, and thirty-two more than 10,000. The second highest peak is the Dapsang, in Western Thibet, 28,278 feet high; the third, Kintchinjunga 28,156 feet, the fourth, the Sisbut peak, in Nepaul, 27,779. Dhawalagiri, in Nepaul, which was formerly considered the highest mountain on the earth, is now ranked as fifth, being but 26,680 feet high.

A Remarkable Coincidence.

It is a matter of journalistic record, that some years since, a schooner set sail from Baltimore, having on board a crew of thirteen men. By a most singular freak of nature, the entire force was attacked by a skin disease, which manifested itself in large ulcerated sores on the arms and hands, wholly incapacitating the men from duty. The result was that the vessel was towed back to the city where the men were placed in the hospital.—Moral! Had Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases been used in the first place, the crew would have recovered in from 12 to 48 hours.

THE TEETH.—Teeth are destroyed either by the action of acids or the development of vegetable parasites. The former is the much more frequent cause of decay. It has been demonstrated by actual experiment that even very weak acids may suffice to decompose the teeth substances. In forty-eight hours the juice of grapes will render the enamel of a chalky consistence. Most vegetable substances are inert until fermentation takes place and acetic acid is formed. Animal substances exert no deleterious influences until putrefaction is far advanced.

A Free Acknowledgement.

I hereby certify that I habitually use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" in my family in all those cases in which a domestic medicine is needed, and that it has never yet failed to accomplish the purpose desired. We look upon it as an anchor to windward that is sure to hold in every instance mentioned on the doctor's bill of particulars. I make this acknowledgement freely, in hope of doing good to others, feeling that a medicine that is near at hand and to be implicity trusted is worth more than it costs. Rev. G. C. ESRAY, Formerly Associate Editor Rondout Freeman.

Have a blotting pad, sir? asked a peripatetic dealer, reaching out one of those absorbents. "How do you fasten the thing on?" inquired Jones, after turning it over and over. "Fasten it on!" exclaimed the peddler, "what do you mean?" "What do I mean?" cried Jones, looking up. "Young man, I've had experience in this pad business. I've bought them for the head, stomach and liver, and this is the first one I ever saw with no tackle on it. No, sir I don't want it. Good day!" The man saw it was no use to argue with Jones.

A Woman's Experience.

Mothers and daughters should feel alarmed when weariness constantly oppresses them. "If I am fretful from exhaustion of vital powers, and the color is fading from my face, Parker's Ginger Tonic gives quick relief. It builds me up and drives away pain and wonderful certainty."—Buffalo lady.

A BUNION REMEDY.—Use pulverized saltpetre and sweet oil; obtain at the druggist's five or six cents worth of saltpetre, put into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to dissolve it; shake up well, and rub the inflamed joints night and morning and more frequently if painful. This is a sure remedy. Or take a small onion, split it and rub the joint with a fresh half each night and morning. To paint it with the tincture of iodine is also good.

Elegance and Purity.

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color, beauty and lustre.

A BARGAIN.

A house and lot for sale. The lot is a large double corner lot, being one of the best and pleasantest situations in the town. For particulars, enquire at the HERALD OFFICE.

A True Cause For Regret.

It makes the heart of every philanthropist sad to see so many worthless patent medicines puffed and advertised for the cure of chronic diseases. Usually the remedy is some vile cathartic composed of alcoholic preparation, combined with buchu, turpentine or other severe diuretic that affords the invalid only temporary relief, but which has no lasting effect, and in truth eventually brings on a complication of diseases arising from a state of worn out and exhausted digestive and urinary organs that nothing but death can relieve. Invalids should trust more to nature for their recovery. A gentle medicinal tonic that stimulates enfeebled digestion and strengthens every part of the system by its soothing and refreshing effect on both mind and body, is natures truest and best assistant. Such a remedy is Brown's Iron Bitters, a medicine surpassing the sale of all other remedies whenever its merits become known, for it acts in such perfect harmony with the laws of life and health that all pulmonary, urinary and digestive troubles are prevented and permanently cured by its timely use. It contains no alcohol, and will not blacken the teeth. Physicians and ministers endorse and recommend it.

The Editors and publishers of Wide Awake make the following announcement of leading features for 1882.

From the Hudson to the Neva.

The materials for a hundred tales of adventure are crowded into this grand serial story of travel, by David Ker. The author has recently visited the countries where the action of this romantic story lies; Algiers, Greece, Turkey, Albania, Montenegro, Russia—thence into Borneo among the fierce and sorcery-loving Malays. This story will be fully illustrated.

Their Club and Ours is a serial story by a boy only 14 years old, and will have 36 illustrations.

A Long Hispano-Roman Story of the second century, by Rev. Edward Everett Hale, will be a leading attraction of the christmas (Jan.) number, and will at once take its place in the long line of Mr. Hale's famous stories.

Rich material from the Folk-Lore of all nations has been given our best balladists and artists for a series of Illustrated Folk-Lore Ballads.

Mr. Benjamin Vaughan Abbott, in

The Traveling Law School,

Miss Harris has prepared a most charming set of Wild Flower Papers, illustrated from nature by Miss L. B. Humphrey.

Among the more amusing features will be a Parlor Comedietta, running through three numbers.

In the October Wide Awake was begun a course of Readings, designed for our young folks. The magazine has been Permanently Enlarged to admit this

New Educational Feature.

STRONG & McNAIR.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

HOLLOWAY.

The sick list is well filled.

James Siprands is improving a little.

Five of James Starin's family, and two or three of W. J. Holdridge's have been sick at one time.

Mrs. James Stretch was buried last Friday. She had been sick a long time with a cancer.

The literary society have moved, and will hereafter hold its meetings at the church. Its meeting was well attended last Saturday evening. All were pleased to see more of the older people present, and would be glad to have them become active members.—They are expecting a good program this week. The question for discussion is, Resolved, That we are indebted to our pilgrim fathers, who landed at Plymouth, for our present civil and religious liberty.

The Presbyterian Sunday school has decided to have a christmas tree, and are making preparations for a good time.

A few of our hunters had a hunt one day last week. It was most all hunt and but little game. But the boys say that the supper was just as good as it would have been had the crowd been larger and game more plenty.

Jerome Green has put up a windmill.

Business at the store continues lively. Kelley & Co. ship stock of some sort nearly every week.

L. B. Spencer went to Buffalo last Saturday.

BROOKLYN.

Our brief term of sunshine is replaced by a snow blanket, and planning for Christmas festivities goes on, notwithstanding nerve jarring accidents, and fear that a disease hitherto deemed indigenous to southern climes may have scattered germs on wandering winds, which have implanted malaria in a sister town, that wears such a look of simon pure; experts fail to detect a difference.

The absence of the Addison correspondent last week made a break in the column and caused alarm lest prolonged watching of the star of Bethlehem had so injured his eyes that he failed to note what was transpiring in that liveliest of all villages. Rumor confidently asserts such is not the case however, and gives as a reason for not reporting that he was suffering from an acute attack of electro magnetic apron string. A and B physicians alike shun the contagion which leaves him an isolated victim of Providential dispensation. Will the delegate to Savannah inquire into the cause, cure and prevention of relapses, especially the latter?

The usual preparation for a church fair and the coming of Bishop Harris, engages the attention of the ladies of All Saints, and the paper war continues to lend variety to week day sameness. PEARLIE.

CLINTON.

Mrs. Warner of Adrian was the guest of Mrs. Ed. Van De Mark over Sunday.

Mr. & Mrs. S. Madden of Jackson, have been visiting for a few days at the residence of John Hause.

George Burton of Jonesville is in town this week for the purpose of shipping his household goods to Angola, Ind.

Dr. J. C. Burroughs returned last week from a trip to the north part of this state where he disposed of a number of horses.

John Orr of Tecumseh was summoned by telegraph to this place Monday to meet friends from Indiana who are visiting at B. O. Randall's.

The Masonic Lodge will hold a public installation at their hall the 27th of this month. Supper will be served and a good time is anticipated.

Ed. Clark is expected back from the east this week with a fine new stock of boots and shoes which he will place in the block recently built west of the bank. His many friends wish him success.

A team said to be owned by Mr. Baily ran from Tecumseh to this place Saturday night, nothing being able to check them in their wild career until they attempted to cross the railroad track at Main street crossing. A freight train was also making the same effort and it is needless to say it was quite effectual in stopping them. The horses received various injuries and were put in the livery barn to await the coming of their owner.

The advance agent of Tony Pastor's minstrels was in town last week endeavoring to make arrangements for the company to come here. But the hall and stage in their present dimentions would be inadequate to such an occasion, and the long talked of improvements to be made, still seem as far in the future as ever.

John R. Clark was seen on our streets a few days ago. We were glad to see him looking so much better.

SPRINGVILLE.

More rain—more mud.

Wood bee next Saturday for the band hall.

Thos. Roache returned to this place for a few days, having been absent two weeks.

Lake mills is doing lively business in the line of feed grinding.

Ayres Bros. bought quite a large clip of wool last week.

Turkeys and chickens purchased by Ayres Bros. were partly delivered here Saturday.

J. H. Clayson, Samuel Kirkby and John Cook attended the convention of Sons of Temperance, held in Detroit last week, as delegates from the Springville lodge.

T. H. Mosher's visit to Detroit last week is accounted for by the fine stock of goods which are arriving.

We are informed that Dist. No. 8, taught by Miss Hattie Helm, of Tecumseh, is one of the best schools that has been kept in the township for a number of years.

The band is still progressing. Their new hall is lighted by a fine chandelier which they purchased last week. Their former snare drummer, James Mason, for some reason became dissatisfied and shouldered his drum and failed to appear at the band meetings any more. The boys purchased a new drum of Ollie Hunt and accepted Ira Rogers as a member to play the same, and Ira is doing well at the business.

This Will Pay.

We consult the best good of our readers in recommending them to now secure the valuable and important information and most interesting reading matter including a thousand or more of pleasing and instructive engravings and sketches, that can be obtained at trifling expense in the American Agriculturist. This is not merely a farm and garden Journal, but is very useful to every house-keeper and to every household in village or country. It has an entertaining and useful department for the little ones. It is a journal that pays to take and read. Try it, and our word for it, you will not be disappointed. Its contents, persistent exposures of humbugs and swindling schemes are worth far more than the cost of the paper. The 41st Annual Volume begins January 1, but those subscribing now for 1882 get the rest of this year free. Terms: $1.50 a year; four copies $5 (English or German edition) single copy 15 c.—N. Alderman Tucker, Boston, says you may state that I have paid for medicine and treatment in 20 years $3,000, without receiving permanent benefit. Entirely cured of his disease, saltrheum, by Cuticura Remedies.

H. E. Carpenter Esq. Henderson, N. Y., cured of Psoriasis or Leprosy, of twenty years' standing, by the Cuticura Resolvent internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally.—The most wonderful case on record.

Improper medicines only aggravate human disease. Don't experiment with your health. If you don't just know what ails you, use Brown's Iron Bitters. It will strengthen you and assist nature in removing every symptom of distress.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

"Our Little Ones" for December, has arrived—one of the best magazines for the little folks Russell Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.

An Old Woman's Advice.

Aunt Rachel, writing to the Cincinnati Enquirer, says: "When you feel unwell and think you must take medicine, for goodness' sake get the best." If you need a remedy that will make you regular in your habits, give you a good natural appetite, make your skin clear and smooth, and remove all spots and blemishes that indicate ill-health; if you wish to be free from mental depression, fretfulness, peevishness, wakefulness and other disorders, use Brown's Iron Bitters."

Blissfield Advance: It is said that school teachers are scarce this fall. On account of the rigid examinations which teachers have to pass under the new law, many do not obtain certificates, and the poorer ones are being weeded out. The consequence will be that better schools will be taught and more remunerative wages paid. Poor teachers are dear at any price and the sooner country districts come to see this fact, the better it will be for all concerned.

The Women at Home.

Our mothers, wives, and daughters: Home is not home at all without them. Yet they may die and leave the house silent and sad any day.—Husbands and fathers, a word in your ear. The ladies are not always to blame when they are low spirited and "cross." They are sick. Put a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" on the shelf and tell them to use it. The color will come back to the cheeks and the laugh to their lips. Go and get it at once down town, or mail One Dollar to the Doctor's address at Rondout, N. Y.

THE Adrian Times very pertinently remarks that when bloated bondholders are trembling for the safety of their wealth in national banks, the average editor sleeps the sleep of the innocent and unconcerned, for he has nothing on his mind or in the bank.

Catarrh.

Clear head and voice, easy breathing, sweet breath, perfect smell, taste and hearing, no cough, no distress.—These are conditions brought about in Catarrh by the use of Sanford's Radical Cure. One bottle Radical Cure, one box Catarrhal Solvent and one Inhaler, in one package, for $1.

David Sample, an old man 77 years old, of Hudson, jumped off a moving freight train, and received quite severe injuries. He was certainly old enough to know better.

Mrs. Lucy E. McCormick, Covington, Ky., writes: "My constitution was completely shattered by rheumatism. I suffered intensely; stimulants only gave me temporary relief. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters. It has cured me completely, and I believe permanently. After using two bottles I felt better and stronger than ever I did in all my life before."

The worshippers of the Congregational church Hudson, now listen to the sweet strains of a fiddle in the choir music.

Uncle "Jim" Robertson, of Ogden, intends shortly to visit the orange groves of Florida. He will probably bring home a young alligator.

THE SECRET COUNCIL.

A TALE OF ANCIENT VENICE.

[The following sketch from Chambers' Journal contains a graphic idea of the terrible power wielded by La Serenissima, the Secret Council of ancient Venice. It furnishes strange reading for this nineteenth century.]

Whilst all other capitals have gradually increased, and are increasing every day in every direction, Venice, surrounded by its inland sea, attained several centuries ago its present size and shape. The Piazza San Marco has been since then its Forum; successive generations have daily repaired to it in quest of news, of sunshine or of friends; and will continue to walk under its arcades, to cross and recross it in every direction, as long as the Duomo and Procurato wall it round, as long as the golden angel on St Mark's Tower shines far above the silent city. Its glory and power have disappeared; the Queen of the Seas is now only a small provincial town. But however fallen from a diplomatic or commercial point of view, Venice has still and always will possess a peculiar thrilling interest. Every stone has its own legacy of romance; every dark gate is haunted by its familiar ghost; every recess, every cranny, whispers its old weird story.

The official annals of the Most Severe Venetian Republic contain innumerable instances of secret arrests, secret trials, followed by still more secret executions; but beside these, many a terrible drama has taken place within the stone walls of the state prisons. Conveniently situated under the Ducal Palace, and with their floors slightly under high water mark, these "wells"—as they were called on account of their dampness—very seldom gave up a victim, except as a corpse. Silent and dark as the grave, they were a fit instrument for a stern and mysterious tribunal. The severity of the Council of Ten, the swiftness with which it reached both high and low, the security of its nocturnal sittings and of its sentences, created a universal feeling of awe, that has not thoroughly disappeared.

Among the lower classes there are many who still believe in the existence of a Secret Council, and who expect it to reappear some day; they abstain therefore from any direct allusion to it, mentioning it only when absolutely necessary, by the vague term of La Serenissima. We may smile at this childish fear; but it proves very clearly the terror it must have inspired. The following legend, that was whispered to me a short time ago by an old gondolier, will show by what means this result was obtained. Though I cannot vouch for the accuracy of every detail, there is no doubt in my mind as to its general truth, because the grandfather of my informant lived at the time it occurred, and would not have dared to repeat any tale against the Serenissima unless he was sure of it. With this proviso I will now relate the legend, as I heard it whilst I was quietly lolling in a Venetian gondola.

It was toward the end of 1760, when one night an English king's messenger reached Mestre, waiting to cross over to Venice. Sir John Hawser—such was his name—was young, brave and very highly connected, and as such, perhaps, he had been chosen by the Ministry to convey some trifling message to King George III's representative in that town. After a delay that would seem enormous to our modern express train travelers, a gondola was manned, his luggage loaded in it, and at last it began to glide toward the city. He reached Venice just before dawn; and after a hurried toilet and a still more hurried breakfast, Sir John delivered his packet, and began to explore the streets and lanes of this incomprehensible city. Being tolerably proficient in the language, he soon found his way to the Piazza San Marco, and was duly astonished by its peculiar aspect. Then, as now, the Piazza was the heart of the city. Laws and edicts were promulgated in it; sentences were pronounced from the balcony of the Ducal Palace; whilst beggars, singers and others of a like caste gave it a strange animation.

Thoroughly enjoying the freedom of walking after his long journey by coach and gondola, Sir John indulged his rambling propensities to the fullest extent. Whilst he was doing so a crowd collected in front of the Ducal Palace. Naturally curious, and having nothing else to do, he hastened to the spot, and elbowed his way to the centre. By the red pillar of the balcony an usher was reading out the sentence of some unknown felon, with all the pompous circumlocutions so much in favor in those days. The wretched prisoner just brought out from some dark cell, seemed scarcely to realize the scene, as his eyes, unused now to the light of the sun, gazed vacantly on the excited mob that surrounded the low scaffold on which he was standing. The sentence having been read, the prisoner was taken away to the jail where he was to undergo the term of imprisonment to which he had just been condemned; and the crowd, the sight being over, gradually dispersed.

This incident in itself was very trifling, and Sir John himself would probably have forgotten it within a week had it not been for its strange consequences. Whilst pushing and elbowing his way through the crowd it seems some clever pickpocket had robbed him of his lace handkerchief. It is certainly very unpleasant to be robbed even of a valueless article; but in this case the thief had obtained a valuable prize; and beside, there was the additional sting for Sir John Hawser of having been robbed by an Italian. He would have been less angry if it had happened in London; the pickpockets there were so clever that there was no shame in being their victim; but to have been plundered by a clumsy Venetian was too much for his equanimity, and he burst out in a torrent of abuse.

Speaking mostly in Italian but mixing in a few English anathemas in his speech, he related his loss to a few bystanders, and was advised by them to complain to the police, or rather to those officials who under the Serenissima fulfilled the present duties of the police. Though without great faith in this plan, he followed it, and gave notice to the authorities. He was assured by very stately officials that he need have no fear, and that his property would soon be found and restored to him. Forced to be content with this vague consolation he went home to his supper and bed.

For three or four days afterward he continued to visit the principal monuments and churches, but without receiving any further information about his lace handkerchief. I have said that Sir John was young and brave; as a consequence he was impetuous and fiery; whilst being born in a free-thinking and a free-speaking country, he was apt to express thoughts as they came into his mind, without reflection and without fear. It is not surprising, therefore, that one night under the arcades of the Procurato, while relating his loss to a few friends, he should have said what he thought of the vaunted secret police of Venice. They were, he said, a stupid set of fools, very pompous and very stately, trying to hide their ignorance and incapacity under very high sounding phrases; but the meanest London detective was worth the lot of them. As to the Secret Council, he did not believe it existed at all; or, if it did, it was no better than the rest.

Ah, Sir John! if you must needs speak so irreverently of the Serenissima, why did you not use your own language? Why did you express your rash thoughts in Italian? Did you not know that walls have ears, and that every stone in Venice is a spy?

His friends, astonished by his sudden outburst, attributed it at first to those last glasses of vino santo they had been drinking together, but knowing full well the jealous care of Serenissima for its reputation, they instinctively shrunk from him, as from a dangerous man; they disappeared around dark corners, down side alleys, and very soon Sir John found himself alone.

Alone! At least so he thought; but a silent figure had been following him for some time, and was now stealthily dodging him. So carefully it walked, so noiselessly it stepped, that for a long time Sir John did not notice this unwelcome shadow, and even when he did, attached no importance to it. But at last he began to feel some doubts about this follower. Nothing could be guessed from his appearance. Completely wrapped up in a dark cloak, and with a wide hat shading his face, he would not have been recognized by his own brother. It was only the peculiar way in which he followed, and the ability with which he availed himself of every nook and corner, that implied danger.

Fearless still, but somewhat annoyed, Sir John pursued his way through the maze of alleys that led from the Piazza to his temporary home. Determined to try to throw off his masked companion, he quickened his step; but at the next turning a glance back showed him it was of no use. Having by this time reached the Pont San Moise—one of the innumerable bridges that cross the minor canals of the city—he stopped on its steps to see what the shadow would do. Astonished at first by this ruse, the man hesitated a second, but a second only, and then disappeared in the shadow of the church. Our hero vainly strained his eyes trying to find out whether he had really gone or was hiding behind the columns and watching. He certainly began to feel an intense interest in this new chase, in which he seemed to be the game hunted down. Then, convinced that he had seen the last of his silent friend, he decided on continuing his way home; and was just going to move on, when a cloak was thrown over his head and chest, completely gagging him, while several strong arms entwined themselves around his body, and effectually pinioned him. Before he could recover himself, a voice whispered in Italian in his ear, "You are a prisoner of the Serenissima; resistance is useless."

Even after these words, the import of which he dimly guessed, Sir John would have tried to strike one blow at least for his life and liberty, but the cloak in which he had been wapped was so securely fastened that he could not move a muscle nor utter a cry. There was no help for it, and he doggedly awaited his fate.

The voices around him seemed to hold a short conference, and then he was lifted up from the ground, carried a short distance, and deposited in a gondola. The journey was not long, though to him it seemed an age, and soon the rocking motion ceased. They evidently had reached their destination. A few seconds more, and he was handed in the same unceremonious manner as at embarking.

After depriving him of his sword, and securing his hands, his captors released him from the folds of the cloak, in which he had been almost choked.

He found himself in a small passage, dimly lighted and very damp. The low ceiling, the strong stone walls, and massive iron doors reminded him at once of all I had heard and read about the state prisons of Venice, and his heart sank within him. Without giving him much time for reflection, however, or asking him any question his captors opened one of the cells, thrust him in, and bolted the door. Left alone in the most absolute darkness, our friend groped around as well as his tied hands would allow him until he found a stone bench, on which he dropped completely unmanned by the novelty and horror of his position.

He had heard of prisoners being kept in these state prisons for months, even for years, without light, with just enough of the coarsest food to keep them alive, and without the shadow of a judgment. Others had been tried and executed within these walls, and their friends outside had never known their fates. Was he too going to disappear from this world without a struggle? Was his body going to be dropped into the "Canal grande?" Or was he to linger in his cell until his youth, his strength, and perhaps his mind were gone, to be released only a wreck of his former self, as a warning to others? There were many in Venice, poor, shattered beings, heart broken, half crazed, shunned by everybody, who had once been the leaders of fashion, of science, of politics, until an anonymous note dropped from the Lion's mouth had caused their arrest, and their tireless detention in the under ground—or rather under water—prisons of Serenissima.

But then who could have denounced him? Who could have an interest to destroy him in this cowardly fashion? All the people he knew were above suspicion; and yet even the Serenissima could not have arrested an Englishman, a king's messenger, without some good reason. In that dreadful silence, broken only by the quiet plashing of the water on the stone walls in which he was imprisoned, his memory particularly vivid, recalled to his mind all the events of the day. At last he remembered those few hot foolish words he had used that very night; they, and they alone could be the cause of his present condition. This, however, brought no relief; it aggravated only his fears and despondency, since he well knew what awful punishments were inflicted on those who, to use a Venetian phrase, "blasphemed the government."

Having settled the cause of his arrest, he gradually fell into a dull, drowsy state of half unconsciousness, staring blindly in the darkness, listening vacantly in the vain hope of catching some sound, however faint, of that outside world he had so recently left. The silence was as complete as the darkness that surrounded him, and hours passed away without bringing any change. Now and then a muffled sound reached his ears. Was it a footstep in the passage? Was it a wave a little higher than the others? Was it only the plaintive cry of the sea-mew? Or was it the dying gasp of a fellow prisoner? He could not tell. After a very long time, of which he could not even guess the length, he distinctly heard a noise as of bolts and keys at his prison door; suddenly it opened and a flood of light illuminated every corner of his dismal cell. Dazzled at first by the glare of the torches, he could not see the men by whom they were carried; but gradually, as his eyes became accustomed to the light, he saw that they were all armed, all masked, and all dressed in black. In the mean time his hands had been released of their fetters, and his guards had quietly surrounded him. Without a word, without a sound, they led him on in their midst. Through dark halls and narrow staircases, through crooked passages and low beetling walls they marched as noiselessly as a group of ghosts surrounding a mortal man.

At last their goal is reached; a door is flung open, and Sir John is ushered into a spacious room. At one end, on a raised platform, sit ten judges, all masked, all draped in large black cloaks. By their sides, but a little lower down, are the scribes of this silent tribunal. Judges and scribes as motionless as if they had been statues and not human beings. The first glimpses of dawn struggling through the painted windows, powerless as yet to supercede the wax candles, gave the whole scene a most weird aspect. Outside, all were sleeping; and no sound reached the inmates of this hall to remind them that a powerful city, a numerous population, surrounded their silent abode.

As soon as the several actors in this strange scene had reached their proper places, a man still masked, and dressed in the same dark hue, began in a monotonous slow tone to give his evidence. Though muffled by the folds of his mask, his voice was peculiarly distinct and clear, and Sir John at once knew it as being the same he had heard when he was arrested. Cold and pitiless as steel, without a tremor and without a pause, the voice repeated all the words used by the culprit when, in his rash burst of passion, he had derided and mocked the knowledge and the power of the Serenissima. Slowly and regularly the words followed each other as the links of a lengthened chain, as steadily as the drops of rain on a winter's day. The pens of the scribes creaked as they hurried over the paper, made a fit accompaniment to this recital. Except for them, all was as motionless, as still, as if no human hearts were beating under those black silk mantles. It ended at last; and with a sense of relief Sir John strained his senses to hear what would follow.

After a short pause, the judge who sat at the centre of the table stood up and addressed him in these terms: "You have heard the evidence against you; now follow us and hear your sentence."

No cross-examination, no defence was allowed by the laws of this Council. Rising together as if moved by a single mind, the funereal procession followed its leader, and left the hall by the door through which Sir John had entered it. Again through the same winding passages, again down the same narrow steps, silently and noiselessly they glided like ghosts returning to their graves. Surrounded by his guards Sir John followed immediately after the last of the judges, wondering all the time what was to be his fate. When they had reached the last floor of the building, and were nearing again the loathsome cell from which he had so lately been taken, the cortege divided, and Sir John was brought face to face with his senior judge.

"You have insulted the Serenissima; you have denied its power of punishing crime, because you were robbed of a paltry handkerchief, and it had not been immediately found and given back to you. Now look!" As he said these words the masked judge stepped on one side, and directed Sir John's gaze to a darker corner of the dark passage. There, hanging against the wall, the rope that encircled his neck disappearing through the stone, was the corpse of a man.

Amazed by the sight, and thinking that perhaps he also was going to be hanged in the same manner by an unseen hand, Sir John felt rooted to the spot.

After a short silence the judge continued. "This man was the thief; in his right hand you will find your handkerchief. Take it. As for you, we ought not perhaps to be so lenient; but in consideration of your youth and of the high position you hold in your country, we will overlook your fault. You are forgiven. Outside this gate a gondola waits for you; it will take you to Mestre, and thence you will be conveyed to the frontier. Go! But always remember what you have seen here to-night.

Seizing with a trembling hand the lace handkerchief that had been the cause of so much trouble, Sir John wanted to speak, wanted to thank this unknown judge; but before he could recover his voice the phantoms had disappeared, and the two jailors only were at his side. Without a word, and apparently without an effort, these two then opened a secret door leading to the canal, and helped the now liberated man into a gondola that was moored to the steps, and in the fore part of which lay his luggage. No word was said, no order was given; the two gondoliers seemed to know their duty, and they silently paddled away from the palace in which Sir John had spent that dreadful night. At Mestre a coach was waiting for him. In a few hours the frontier was crossed. Then and only then did he begin to breathe freely. But for a long time afterward he avoided any allusion to his Venetian adventure; and for many years he could not bear to speak of it.

Now the Serenissima is gone, the cells have been sacked by an infuriated mob, innumerable tourists visit the halls where the Secret Council held its nightly sittings; but even now I cannot help feeling relieved when I have left behind me Venice, its dark canals and the darker memories that cling to them.

OLD SUPERSTITIONS.—It used to be a common thing for sailors to refuse to go to sea on a Friday. We hear nothing of this in these steamboat days. Steam has made every day alike. It has been a very great changer, and in the matter of popular superstitions it has proved the great reformer. Wherever steam engines appear, superstitions disappear—ghosts, fairies and witches are speedily forgotten. Who ever heard of a ghost in a railway station, or of a bewitched cattle truck, or of a haunted saloon carriage? The thing is impossible. The most expert seer couldn't find a ghost in a first-class waiting room—could not even imagine such a thing. Ghosts like very different quarters—old houses, wainscoted rooms, secret passages, few visitors.

Terrible Acciden

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rosendale, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye.—Total blindness in a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to the pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys, cures constipation, and all weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all our druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

THE KING FORTUNE-MAKER: OZONE!

A New Process for Preserving all Perishable Articles, Animal and Vegetable, from Fermentation and Putrifaction, retaining their Odor and Flavor.

"OZONE—Purified air, active state of oxygen."—WEBSTER.

This preservative is not a liquid, pickle or any of the old and exploded processes, but is simply and purely OZONE, as produced and applied by an entirely new process. Ozone is the antiseptic principle of every substance, and possesses the power to preserve animal and vegetable structure from decay. There is nothing on the face of the earth liable to decay or spoil which OZONE, the new Preservative, will not preserve for all time in a perfectly fresh and palatable condition.

The value of OZONE as a natural preserver has been known to our abler chemists for years, but until now no means of producing it in a practical inexpensive, and simple manner have been discovered.

Microscopic observations prove that decay is due to septic matter or minute germs that develop and feed upon animal and vegetable structures. OZONE, applied by the Prentiss method, seizes and destroys these germs at once, and thus preserves. At our office in Cincinnati can be seen almost every article that can be thought of preserved by this process, and every visitor is welcome to come in, taste, smell, take away with him, and test in every way the merits of OZONE as a preservative. We will also preserve, free of charge, any article that is brought or sent postpaid to us, and return it to the sender, for him to keep and test.

EGGS can be treated at a cost of less than one dollar a thousand dozen, and be kept in an ordinary room six months or more, thoroughly preserved, the yolk held in its normal condition, and the eggs as fresh and perfect as on the day they were treated, and will sell as strictly "choice." The advantage in preserving eggs is readily seen; there are seasons when they can be bought for 6 or 10 cents a dozen, and by holding them can be sold for an advance of from one hundred to three hundred per cent. One man with this method can preserve 5,000 dozen a day.

FRUITS may be permitted to ripen in their native climate, and can be transported to any part of the world. The juice expressed from fruits can be held for any indefinite period without fermentation—hence the great value of this process for producing a temperance beverage. Milk and cider can be held perfectly sweet any length of time.

VEGETABLES can be kept for an indefinite period in their natural condition, retaining their odor and flavor, treated in their original packages, at a small expense. All grain, flour, meal, etc., are held in their normal condition.

FRESH MEATS, such as beef, mutton, veal, pork, poultry, game fish, etc., preserved by this method, can be shipped to Europe, subjected to atmospheric changes, and return to this country in a state of perfect preservation.

BUTTER AFTER BEING TREATED BY THIS PROCESS will NOT become RANCID.

Dead human bodies, treated before decomposition sets in, can be held in a natural condition for weeks without puncturing the skin or mutilating the body in any way. Hence the great value of Ozone to undertakers.

There is no change in the slightest particular in the appearance of any article thus preserved, and no trace of any foreign or unnatural odor or taste.

The process is so simple that a child can operate it as well and successfully as a man. There is no expensive apparatus or machinery required.

A room filled with different articles, such as eggs, meat, fish, etc., can be treated at one time, without additional trouble or expense.

In fact, there is nothing that Ozone will not preserve. Think of everything you can think of that is liable to sour, decay, or spoil, and then remember that we guarantee that Ozone will preserve it in exactly the condition you want it for any length of time. If you will remember this, it will save asking questions as to whether Ozone will preserve this or that article—it will preserve any thing and every thing you can think of.

There is not a township in the United States in which a live man can not make any amount of money, from $1,000 to $10,000 a year, that he pleases. WE DESIRE TO GET A LIVE MAN INTERESTED IN EACH COUNTY OF THE UNITED STATES, in whose hands we can place this Preservative, and through him secure the business which each county ought to produce.

A FORTUNE Awaits any man who secures control of OZONE in any Township or County.

A. C. Bowen, Marion, Ohio, cleared $2,000 in two months. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
Woods Brothers, Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, made $6,000 on eggs purchased in July and sold November 1st. $2 for a test package was their first investment.
F. K. Raymond, Morristown, Belmont County, Ohio, is clearing $2,000 a month in handling and selling Ozone. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
D. F. Webber, Charlotte, Eaton County Mich., has cleared $1,000 a month since August. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
I. B. Gayford 80 LaSalle Street, Chicago, is preserving eggs, fruit, etc., for the commission men of Chicago, charging 1½c per dozen for eggs, and other articles in proportion. He is preserving 5,000 dozen eggs a day, and on his business is making $9,000 a month clear. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
The Cincinnati Seed Company, 198 West Seventh Street, is making $5,000 a month handling brewers' malt, preserving and shipping it as feed to all parts of the country. Malt, unpreserved sours in twenty-four hours. Preserved by OZONE it keeps perfectly sweet for months.
These are instances which we have asked the privilege of publishing. There are scores of others. Write to any of the above parties and get the evidence direct.
We, to prove the absolute truth of every thing we have said in this paper, we propose to place in your hands the means of proving for yourself that we have not claimed half enough. To any person who doubts any of these statements, and who is interested sufficiently to make the trip, we will pay all traveling and hotel expenses for a visit to this city, if we fail to prove any statement that we have made.

HOW TO SECURE A FORTUNE WITH OZONE.

A test package of Ozone, containing a sufficient quantity to preserve one thousand dozen eggs, or other articles in proportion, will be sent to any applicant on receipt of $2. This package will enable the applicant to pursue any line of tests and experiments he desires, and thus satisfy himself as to the extraordinary merits of Ozone as a Preservative. After having satisfied himself, and had time to look the field over to determine what he wishes to do in the future—whether to sell the article to others, or to confine it to his own use, or any other line of policy which is best suited to him and to his township or county—we will enter into an arrangement with him that will make a fortune for him and give us good profits. We will give exclusive township or county privileges to the first responsible applicant who orders a test package and desires to control the business in his locality. The man who secures control of Ozone for any special territory will enjoy a monopoly which will surely enrich him.

Let a day pass until you have ordered a Test Package, and if you desire to secure an exclusive privilege, we assure you that delay may deprive you of it for the applications come in to us by scores every mail—some by telegraph.

If you do not care to send money in advance for the test package, we will send it C. O. D.; but this will put you to the expense of charges for return of money, the correspondence is very large; we have all we can do to attend to the shipping of orders and giving attention to our working agents. Therefore we cannot give attention to letters which do not order Ozone. If you think of any article that you are doubtful about Ozone preserving, remember we GUARANTEE THAT IT WILL PRESERVE IT, NO MATTER WHAT IT IS.

REFERENCES: We desire to call your attention to a class of references which no enterprise or firm based on any thing but the soundest business success and highest commercial merit could secure.

We refer by permission, as to our integrity and to the value of the Prentiss Preservative, to the following gentlemen: Edward C. Boyce, Member Board of Public Works; E. O. Eshelby, City Comptroller; Armor Smith, Jr., Collector Internal Revenue; Wulsin & Worthington, Attorneys; Martin H. Harrell and B. F. Hopkins, county commissioners; W. S. Capelles, County Auditor; all of Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio. These gentlemen are each familiar with the merits of our Preservative, and know from actual observation that we have without question

THE MOST VALUABLE ARTICLE IN THE WORLD.

The $2 you invest in a test package will surely lead you to secure a township or county, and then your way is absolutely clear to make from $2,000 to $20,000 a year.

Give your full address in every letter, and send your letter to

"TAFFY."

A queer exclamation of late has been heard,
'Tis based on the novel misuse of a word;
And tho' some may think it rather absurd,
You'll see that it's quite expressive.

In steamer or carriage, in parlor or street
We hear it—'tis uttered by all we may meet.
They over and over and ever repeat
This remark, "You're giving me taffy."

The wife who desires a new bonnet or dress
Will give her dear husband a loving caress,
And then on his lips a warm kiss will impress.
She's silently giving him taffy.

His daughter would like a piano—a grand;
She murmurs while holding her pa by the hand,
"You're the sweetest, the dearest papa in the land."
She's giving her pardy taffy.

Before each election, as certain as fate
You'll find on the rostrum the old candidate
Who says, if elected, he'll honor the State
And thus he appeals to his hearer.

"I'll not take a bribe, nor be influenced. No!
My love for my state will unceasingly flow;
If elected, I'll make all the Chinamen go:"
He's giving the people taffy.

"Come John," says a father, "I claim as my right,"
To know why you didn't come home 'till 'twas dark?"
And Johnny gives this as his answer:
"I was reading a book on the state of the nation,
And filling my mind with information,
At the Young Men's Christian Association.
He was giving the old man taffy.

The battle of life—courtship is the engagement or siege, the proposal is the assault, and matrimony the victory.

A young man by the name of Neck was recently married to Miss Heels; they are now, therefore, tied neck and heels together.

The difference.—"Ah, yes," said a cabinet maker to a crockery dealer, to whom he was introduced—"ah, yes; you sell tea sets, and I sell settees."

When the affectionate father of five grown daughters calls at a hardware store for an extra stout pair of gate hinges, it means that the spring campaign has opened.

A shrewd little fellow was intrusted to the care of his uncle, who fed the boy very poorly. One day he happened to see a greyhound; whereupon he asked the boy if he knew what made the dog so poor, and the reply was, "I expect he lives with his uncle."

"Ten dimes make one dollar," said the school-master. "Now, go on, sir. Ten dollars make one—what?" "They make one mighty glad these times," replied the boy; and the teacher who hadn't got his last month's salary yet, concluded that the boy was about right.

Hair as an Index to Temperament.

Viewed naturally, the hair is as great an index of temperament and disposition as the features. Coarse dark hair and skin signify great power of character. Fine dark hair and skin signify strength of character along with purity and goodness. Straight, stiff black hair indicates a coarse, strong, straightforward character. Fine dark brown hair signifies the combination of exquisite sensibility with great strength of character. Flat, clinging, straight hair, a melancholy, but extremely constant character. Coarse red hair indicates powerful passion, together with a corresponding strength of character. Auburn hair, with florid countenance, denotes the highest of sentiments, intensity of feeling and purity of characters, with the highest capacity for employment or suffering. Straight even, smooth and glossy hair denotes strength, harmony and evenness of character, hearty affections, a clear head and superior talents. Fine, silky, supple hair, is a mark of delicate and sensitive temperament, and speak in favor of the mind and character. White hair denotes a lymphatic and indolent constitution. And we may add that, besides all the qualities, there are chemical properties residing in the coloring matter, which undoubtedly have some effect upon the disposition. Thus, red-headed people are notoriously passionate. Now, red hair is proved by analysis to contain a large amount of sulphur, while very black hair is colored with almost pure carbon. The presence of these matters in the blood points to qualities of temperament and feeling which are almost universally associated with them. The very way in which the hair flows is strongly indicative of the ruling passions and inclinations, and perhaps a clever person could give a shrewd guess at the manner of a man of woman's disposition by only seeing the back of their hair.

A Word to Mothers.

Mother should remember it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic, advertised in our columns.

SOUTHERN MODE OF COOKING RICE.—Pick over the rice and wash it in cold water; to one pint rice put three quarts of boiling water and half teaspoonful salt; boil it just seventeen minutes from the time it begins to boil; turn off all the water; set it over a moderate fire with the cover off, to steam fifteen minutes. Take care and be accurate. The rice water first poured off is good to stiffen muslins.

Always Refreshing.

A delicious odor is imparted by Floreston Cologne, which is always refreshing, no matter how freely used.

Choosing a Profession.

Dr. Holland and others, who have been discussing the question of how a young man should choose a profession, can profit by the experience of a young man who promised his dying father that he would adopt a profession, and that it should be one that his conscience told him he was fitted to fill. The old man died, and the son began to consider what profession he should select. At first he thought of the medical, but reflection convinced him that he never could go through the ordeal of fitting for it, as he hadn't the nerve to rob a graveyard. Then he thought of law, but as he became satisfied that he couldn't be friends on the street with the man who, in the court-room, called him a snivelling blackguard, and whom he had hinted was an ex-train wrecker, and moreover as he wasn't good at poker, he gave up that idea. He thought of the stage, but the conclusion that he shouldn't like to be fired at several times a week by the men with whose wives he had flirted made him feel that he was unfit for that profession. The church suggested itself. He might be a clergyman. But when he asked himself: "Do you like to play croquet?" his conscience compelled him to admit that he detested the game. He was, therefore, unfitted for the church. But at last a happy thought struck him. He did not object to profanity, he was willing to yell at the top of his voice, he enjoyed a scuffle now and then, and he liked to wear diamonds and draw a big salary. The way was open to him to keep his promise to his father by becoming a professional man, and at the same time do nothing that his conscience told him he was unfitted for. He pitches a curved ball."—Boston Post.

A Woman's Experience.

Mothers and daughters should feel alarmed when weariness constantly oppresses them. "If I am fretful from exhaustion of vital powers, and the color is fading from my face, Parker's Ginger Tonic, gives quick relief. It builds me up and drives away pain and wonderful certainty."—Buffalo lady.

Carrageen.

The fact is not generally known that within three hours' ride of Boston a large and profitable business has been carried on since 1848 along the seashore, which is nothing more or less than "farming under the sea." Everywhere upon the coasts of eastern New England may be found, ten feet below the water mark, the lichen known as carrageen—the "Irish Moss" of commerce. It may be torn from the sunken rocks anywhere, and yet, the little seaport of Scituate is almost the only place in the country where it is gathered and cured. This village is the great centre of the moss business in the country, and the entire Union draws its supplies from these beaches. Long rakes are used in tilling this marine farm, and it does not take long to fill the manyories that await the lichen, torn from its salty, rock bed. The husbands and fathers gather the moss from the sea, and the wives and daughters prepare it for the market. Soak it in water and it will melt away to a jelly. Boil it in milk and a delicious white and creamy blanc mange is the result. The annual product is from ten to fifteen thousand barrels, and it brings $50,000 into the town, which sum is shared by one hundred and fifty families. Its consumption in the manufacture of lager beers is very large, and the entire beer interest of the country draws its supplies from Scituate beaches, as the importation from Ireland has almost ceased. It is not generally known that the moss, as an article of food, is called "sea moss farina."

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color, beauty and lustre.

Cultivating Water Lilies.

We have several times suggested that those who are fond of the most beautiful Water Lily, or Pond Lily (Nymphæa odorata)—as who is not?—can cultivate it with very little trouble. These who have hesitated to make the attempt will be encouraged by the following account of its successful treatment, by Miss Ruckman, St. Joseph Co., Ind. Miss R writes: "We have a half hogshead in our yard, which is sunk even with the ground. In the bottom is some of the soil taken from the bottom of a little lake where the Water Lilies grow. We put in several roots of the Lily, filled the barrel with water, and then awaited results. The next July we noticed seven small buds on the surface of the water; by the 1st of August, the surface of the tub was a mass of beauty, the large white Lilies being an attraction for the passers-by that could not be resisted. This was three years ago; each year there have been more flowers than in the previous summer. In the fall, we throw a little manure into the tank, place some boards over the top, and with this little bit of trouble increase the beauty of our experiment, which has been a success."

THE WIFE.—When prospects are clouded by the dark shadows of anguish, and the world seems, in a moment of wretched forgetfulness, like a barren desert, what bliss in the thought that there is one being who will sympathize with our sorrow, and cheer us with the tenderest affection. When those who set up as idols in the temple of friendship and esteem shall basely desert the post of honor and integrity, is it not happiness to have one who looks fondly as ever on our fortune, and loves with a purity and warmth unknown to the most sacred friendship?

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms, which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic and other poisonous minerals, form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

As the message was not given to the public until Tuesday of last week, it was impossible to present it to our readers in last week's paper. And messages like other items of news soon grow old. We therefore print this week a brief synopsis of the same which embraces all the points of interest or importance:

He reviews our relations with foreign nations, and declares them to be satisfactory. Steps have been taken to secure the better protection of American Hebrews in Russia and American missionaries in Turkey. A protest has been addressed to the Swiss Government in regard to the deportation of criminals to this country, and treaties of commerce and navigation have been concluded with Rumania and Servia. In regard to the Panama Canal the President reviews the action of President Garfield's Administration in the matter, and announces that he has supplemented the action of his predecessor by proposing to the British Government the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the "abrogation of such clauses thereof as do not comport with the obligations of the United States toward Colombia, or with the vital needs of the two friendly powers to the compact." The temporary misunderstanding between our Ministers to Peru and Chili is ascribed to the want of "prompt reciprocal communication," and the President announces that he has sent special envoys to both republics, with general instructions which it hoped will enable them to bring these powers into friendly relations. The President, in treating our relations with the East, announces that he hopes at some future time to lay before Congress a scheme for the improvement of our system of consular jurisdiction throughout the entire East. In regard to domestic matters, the President in the main approves the recommendations which have been made by the heads of the different departments in their annual reports. He approves all the important suggestions of the Secretary in regard to the finances; recommends the retirement of the silver certificates, and the coinage of silver be confined to what is required by demand. He is opposed to the refunding of the 3½ per cent. bonds, unless they can be refunded at a much lower rate than they now bear. The appointment of a commission to revise the tariff is recommended, but "important changes are to be made with caution." In regard to the Star route prosecutions, the President states that he has enjoined upon the officials who are charged with the matter "the duty of prosecuting with the utmost rigor of the law." The question of the civil-service reform is treated at some length. The President regards some sort of reform as necessary, but objects to appointment and promotion by competition on the ground that such a method has met with success in England when accompanied with life tenure, limitations of maximum age at entrance, and a retiring allowance, which feature he thinks would not be regarded with favor in the United States, and he doubts the success of the system without them. He suggests the "submission of a portion of the nominations to a central board of examiners selected solely for testing the qualifications of applicants, without resort to the competitive test."—The decline of our merchant marine is deplored, and the same kind of aid and protection as has been bestowed upon our manufacturers is recommended. To put down polygamy in the Territories, legislation is recommended "by which any person solemnizing a marriage in any of the Territories shall be required to file a certificate of such marriage in the Supreme Court of the Territory." In concluding his message the President calls the attention of Congress to the question of Presidential inability, and recommends that speedy consideration be given to it.

THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its politest editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

Hudson Post: Mr. Hounson, of the east side, has the best cow in the town he says, and hazards the oysters on it—a regular "fill pail" and "cream pot." Said cow has been milked since March 1st last, and in three days of last week gave an average of 27¾ pounds of milk per day. He made nine pounds of butter in the seven days of last week, besides the family use of the milk. She is a grade. Who comes next, or who wishes to go to the head? Let some one spell and go up to the oysters.

JOHN R. CLARK has returned and reports full houses at Flint, Bay City, and other cities. He will speak in this immediate vicinity once a week, (Sundays) until New Year, when he will return to Peoria, to speak on temperance and repeat his "To and Fro in London," 157th time in all, speaking in Western Michigan and in Illinois on the way. One hundred citizens of Oil City, Pa., who heard him at the Chautauqua, N. Y. Sunday School Assembly, 1880, have invited him to deliver a course of Temperance lectures, concluding with "To and Fro in London," at his earliest opportunity. Mr. Clark signed the pledge in that city in the crusade movement of 1873.

MATRIMONIAL.

Cupid's net has entangled one of the HERALD boys at last. Will T. Eccles was united in marriage last evening with Miss Anna M. Bartlett, daughter of Moses Bartlett Esq., of Clinton. The ceremony was performed in a very appropriate manner by Rev. W. P. Wastell. The company present was not large, consisting mostly of family relatives, but it was a very jolly and pleasant one. Mr. Eccles had already rented and furnished a house here in Tecumseh, (the house of Mrs. Mathews, on Oneida street,) and the new couple took possession of their own home last evening. The match itself, the marriage ceremony and the wedding tour carried out our ideal of a wedding to perfection. The parties received a large number of elegant and useful gifts, the most valuable one being $100 in gold coin from the bride's father. Will. and Anna start in life together with a bright star lighting their pathway. May they be blessed with health, wealth and happiness is the earnest wish of their numerous friends.

THOS. THORP has gone into the shaving and hair-dressing business, having bought a chair and gone in with Dan Hubbard. We wish him success.

AND now the Deerfield Record has been enlarged to a seven column folio. The Record is a newsy sheet and deserves the prosperity it is evidently enjoying.

THE study of American authors of note is becoming a prominent feature of our schools. Verify this statement by visiting the schools Friday afternoon of this week.

REMEMBER Davenport's New Year's Ball on Monday evening, Jan. 2d, at the Lake Ridge hotel. Let's all turn out and go and see Lime; for there we can go and have a good time.

THE first number of the Branch County Record has arrived. It is a very neat six column folio, all printed at home. It is conducted by Mr. H. Egabroad and is republican in politics.

THE Manchester Enterprise has discarded the patent insides and now runs both sides upon its own power press. Mat is always up with the times in availing himself of the latest improvements.

A LARGE number of visitors is expected at the schools, Friday afternoon, to listen to the exercises commemorative of the life and writings of the very popular American poet, John Greenleaf Whittier.

THE Philadelphia Times takes the lead among the independent papers. It is a continual thorn in the side of the machine politicians and scalawags of both parties, and is doing valiant servic in the cause of political reform. Read their announcement in another column.

COMFORT, the leading miller in Southern Michigan, received 40 bags choice buckwheat flour a few days ago from the state of New York, which has mostly gone into pan cakes, but he has 50 bags more on the way, which he will warrant pure and first-class in every respect and will sell it reasonable.

WHEN St. Nicholas calls round to select his Christmas presents, he should not forget to inspect the Christmas Cards which are on sale at the HERALD office. Calling cards also make a very neat as well as cheap Christmas gift, and of these we have a very large assortment in stock. They will be printed with elegant type at short notice.

THE first lecture of the temperance course will be given this evening by Neal Dow, the celebrated temperance advocate, of Maine. Neal Dow is considered by many fully equal if not superior to John B. Gough. He ought to draw a crowded house. The second lecture of the course will be given by Ann Eliza Young, on Thursday evening of next week.

V. B. SNYDER & SON, of Toledo, have a new card in this week's HERALD. They propel the "Old Reliable Carpet House" of Toledo, and their sobriquet has been well earned. They keep a very extensive stock of carpets, their figures are low, and a purchaser can always rely upon their representations. When you want a carpet, or even a carpet sweeper give them a call.

THE HERALD with the December supplement is overweight; that is, one copy weighs over two ounces, and requires two cents postage. Our friends who send the HERALD away during December must tear out the supplement or affix a two cent stamp to the wrapper, or the paper will be thrown into the waste basket. Please bear this in mind.

Morenci Observer: The lecture course in this village starts out with a genuine boom as the season tickets already sold is largely in excess of any similar effort in the place, and shows unmistakably that our people have confidence in the gentlemen who have charge of the enterprise. The success of the lecture course in Morenci this winter is already assured.

HENRY SMITH caught two of his fingers between the steam rollers of the paper machine one day last week, and got them terribly mashed. The fingers were both jammed and burned so that the wound was intensely painful for two or three days after the accident. He is now on the mend however and unless some unforseen pull back occurres he will be about again soon.

A CERTAIN man who lives in Tecumseh visited a certain place one evening last week and by a certain peculiar process was fleeced out of a certain sum of money, to-wit., $150. The next day the wife of the fleece called upon the fleecer and politely informed him that he might refund that money or be arrested inside of fifteen minutes, and the woman got the money in less time than it takes to relate it. That woman was the best man of the three.

Farmers' Meeting.

It is the request of Prof. Carpenter of the Agricultural College, that the farmers of Lenawee Co., would meet him at the Grange Hall in Macon on Tuesday, Dec. 20th, at 1 P. M. sharp, for the purpose of making definite arrangements for the Farmers' Institute which has been assigned to them by the state board of agriculture to be held the 2d and 3d of February. Let there be a good representation from each township in the county.

MANY FARMERS.

The State Farmers' Institute will be held in Macon Grange hall, Feb. 2nd and 3rd, 1882. Four professors of the Agricultural college, at Lansing, will be present, also many others, who will add greatly to the interest of the occasion, and a grand time may be anticipated.

THE North American Review, although published by Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., is owned and wholly controlled by its editor. Messrs Appleton & Co., in view of recent articles that have appeared in it, will decline to act as its publishers after the close of the present year.

PROF. TICE, the distinguished Meteorologist and Weather Prophet of St. Louis, has issued his Annual National Weather Forecasts for 1882, in which besides foretelling the weather for every day in the year, and clearly explaining the theory on which his predictions are based, he gives much other information concerning atmospheric phenomenon—the whole designed not only to give the facts he to the weather, but to teach the masses the facts determining weather changes. Other matter concerning the farm, garden and household, of special interest, is added—the whole serving to make it the most complete and practical of his long series of annual issues. Its value to everyone, and especially the farmer, is apparent. For sample copy and terms to the trade and to agents, send 20 cents to Thompson, Tice & Lillington, St. Louis, Mo.

MACON GRANGE ANNIVERSARY.

Last Friday, Dec. 9th, a public Grange meeting, in commemoration of the organization of the Grange, was held at Macon Grange hall. The day was a fine one, and at an early hour the farmers, with their wives and daughters, began to assemble. At 12:40 o'clock the meeting was called to order by Master J. W. Baker, the choir sung "My Dear Old Home," prayer was offered by Rev. Kilpatrick, after which the Master stated the object of the meeting; and read the benefits and objects of the Grange organization of to-day; after which he introduced Dr. Geo. Howell, of Macon, who delivered a very excellent address upon the subject of "Anniversaries" and subjects of particular interest to the farming community. This address will be published in full next week.

Remarks were then made by Revs. Kershow, De Spelder and Kilpatrick, and others, and the whole company, at the earnest suggestion of Cyrus Mead, adjourned to the basement and partook of a meal which can only be prepared by the farmers' wives.

A CORPORATION TEAM.

The project of purchasing a team for use by the corporation has been carefully considered by the Common Council and action will probably be taken at the next meeting to buy one. For the action already taken we refer to the Council proceedings. At the special meeting, held last Monday evening, the report referred to as submitted by Mr. Mill., is as follows:

The committee appointed at the last regular meeting of the council to estimate the cost of procuring and maintaining a team for the fire engine and to do other work for the village, reports that he does not think it advisable at present to buy land and build a barn in which to keep a team, but as he failed to find any team that could be hired to handle the engine he recommends that a good sound heavy team be bought, also a harness and wagon, and that for the present the team be boarded by Reynolds & Silvers, that being the nearest available place to the engine house. If after a fair trial it is found that the team is a good investment then will be time to buy land, build a barn &c., but if with a fair trial the team proves a poor investment, it will be an easy matter to sell it. Thus we can make the experiment with small cost.

The consideration of the report was deferred until next Monday evening for a full meeting of the Council. We see no reason why this report should not be adopted without a dissenting voice. The committee found, upon investigation, that it was impossible to hire a suitable team. Neither the livery stables nor the draymen owned a team which was heavy enough for the purpose.

By the proposed arrangement the village will own a team, and a suitable one. The team can be used for street work, and other village purposes when necessary. They can be taken care of and properly exercised when not in use for the sum of $5,00 per week. Reynold's & Silvers will agree to have a man sleep in their barn every night, so that the team can be available at a moment's notice for use on the engine. The team certainly ought to earn the village enough to pay for their keeping. This plan will allow the Council to try the experiment for six months or one year, at an outlay of simply the cost of team, harness and wagon. If the experiment works well, it can be continued. If not, the team and outfit can be sold for nearly if not quite their cost. The plan recommended by the committee seems to meet the emergency wisely and economically, and we see no reason why it should not be adopted by a unanimous vote of the Council.

DEATH OF HORACE BREWER.

Again is Tecumseh called to mourn the loss of an esteemed and enterprising citizen. Horace Brewer, after a lengthy illness, was summoned to the Better Land at an early hour last Sunday morning. His disease was chronic atrophy of the stomach. This vital organ failed to perform its functions, and the strong man's life slowly ebbed away for want of sustenance. The kindest care of friends and the best medical skill were unavailing.—The angel of death called and he obeyed the summons.

The deceased was born at Hartford, Conn., Aug. 13, 1816. He came to Tecumseh in 1837, when 21 years of age, and began life in this new western town with good health and good habits as his capital. He was married Nov. 4th, 1841. From that date until 1848 he conducted the saw mill business, first at Ridgeway, Michigan, and afterwards at Toledo, Ohio. In 1848 he purchased the interest of J. S. Strong in the Tecumseh Foundry, and was associated with Elijah Anderson in that business until 1860, when he purchased Mr. Anderson's interest, and for many years conducted the business alone. Under his prudent management it expanded into the most extensive and lucrative manufacturing establishment of Tecumseh. The growth of this business finally compelled him to receive as associates into the firm Mr. H. W. Conkling and his son Albert, and since then the business has been conducted by H. Brewer & Co. Mr. Brewer, at one time, owned an interest in the Tecumseh Agricultural Works of McConnell, Raymond & Co.; for several years he was part owner and manager of a large stave and heading mill at Dundee, and at his death controlled the greater portion of that property. During his long and active life in Tecumseh he has filled several positions of public trust, having served as President of the Common Council for two terms and as school trustee for six years. He never sought official preferment, but when called to an office by his fellow citizens he performed its duties with singular fidelity and tact.

The funeral obsequies were attended at the family residence last Tuesday afternoon. There was no attempt at display. The services were very simple but exceedingly appropriate and impressive. The floral offerings were few but fitting, the most elaborate having been presented by the employees in the foundry. The entire ceremony symbolized the plain, strong, manly character of the deceased. The employees of H. Brewer & Co., numbering over twenty, attended in a body as a token of respect for their patron and friend, and to assist in bearing his body to the tomb. Wm. Hayden, J. S. Strong, B. J. Bidwell, Jno. J. Adam, D. D. Meeker, and E. A. Tribou officiated as pall-bearers.

The hearts of our people beat in sympathy with the stricken widow and daughter and sons in their bereavement. Their loss is, in a measure, ours also. Horace Brewer was a man of high personal worth, of unflinching integrity, of great business capacity, foremost in every matter of public improvement, and untiring in his efforts to promote the general welfare. He left the impress of his own vigorous character upon every enterprise in which he engaged. Every man with whom he came in business contact was his friend. "By their works ye shall know them." Measured by this standard, how large a page of Tecumseh's history will be adorned with Horace Brewer's name. We will not invade the sanctity of the family circle by attempting a formal panegyric upon his private life. His business achievements, his public benefactions, his noble character as a man and citizen, reveal what he must have been within the sacred precincts of home. Husband and Father: These words alone name the bond that has been severed. But weep not, kind friends; Our Heavenly Father will deal with him generously. Great souls, like his, though sadly missed here below, fill the niches of honor on High. Those who knew him best can unite in this benediction at his tomb: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A Fatal Accident.

Last Saturday a fire broke out on the Fair Grounds at Adrian, among the cattle sheds, and a portion of the sheds was destroyed. The loss was in the neighborhood of $1500. A fatal accident occurred by which W. Blake, the driver of the Babcock engine lost his life. While turning from Church to Winter street the engine was overturned and thrown into the ditch and Blake was thrown violently upon the sidewalk or against a tree, sustaining internal injuries, which caused his death a few hours later. No one happened to be on the spot when the accident occurred, so that the cause of the accident can only be surmised. As one horse had the bits out of its mouth when found it is likely that the team became unmanageable. The engine was considerably damaged and must be sent to Chicago for repairs.

How It Strikes 'Em.

If you want to know a man for what he is, take him in a hot day. Most everybody has a way of standing cold weather, but when the sun jumps the mercury above eighty-five degrees human nature becomes reckless. A citizen who waited in the shade of the post office for a quarter of an hour yesterday had plenty of proof of this. The first who approached was a solid business man, his hat on one side and his coat half off. The other day he was crazy on the subject of politics, but yesterday when asked how he liked the nomination, he belched out:

"What in Texas have I got to do with politics? There's too much politics in this country—too blasted much! I wonder what in blazes such weather was sent to us for?

The next man is generally looked upon as a meek and humble minded citizen. He has been known to buy a dog rather than see it killed, and he refuses to fish because he believes the hook hurts 'em. He came along mopping his brow and trying to get away from a sticky undershirt, and was pleasantly asked if the weather suited him.

"See here, sir!" he began, as he bristled up like a fighting dog, "I mind my own business and desire other people to mind theirs! I never did strike a man yet, but I want no impudence from you or any one else!"

The next man was a lawyer. He was asked if he could keep cool, and he turned into the shade, pulled out his handkerchief, and replied:

"Attorney Blank insulted me in open court about a month ago, and though I did think I wouldn't pay any attention to it, yet this hot wave has convinced me that it is my duty to slap his mouth on sight! Have you seen him pass this way?"

The next man has a local reputation as a jolly, good-hearted fellow, and men have known him for years without hearing him speak a cross word. He toiled along in the hot sun, with the perspiration running down his cheeks, and as he reached the shade he was accosted by a bootblack. He took off hat, wiped his face, and then said:

"I believe you are the boy who cut off my horse's tail, one night last week, and if you don't go away from me I'll do you a mortal injury!"

There were several other instances going to show that while cold brings out the cheery in man's nature, heat parboils his sentiments and hardens his better feelings. In cold weather men will hunt for a friend to drink with them. In summer they will sneak off alone and go into a saloon by an alley door. Not one man in a hundred will refuse to sign a petition in the winter, but when approached in red-hot season they won't even listen to two of the twenty-four reasons why they should sign. This mysterious change must have been forcibly felt by a leading citizen, who, the other day wrote a postal card saying:

"In May I subscribed $25 to help build a new church. If you come now I will pay it. If you wait till hot weather sets in I'll repudiate the subscription and give you a chance to lick the subscriber.—Detroit Free Press.

Who Struck Billy Patterson?

Many persons have heard the question, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" without knowing the origin of it. William Patterson was a very wealthy tradesman or merchant of Baltimore in the state of Maryland. In the early days of Franklin county he bought up a great many tracts of land in the county, and spent a good portion of his time in looking after his interests there. He was said to be as strong as a bear and as brave as a lion, but like all brave men he was a lover of peace, and indeed, a good pious man. Nevertheless his wrath could be excited to a fighting pitch. On one occassion he attended a public gathering in the lower part of Franklin county, at some district court ground. During the day the two opposing bullies and their friends raised a row, and a general fight was the consequence. At the beginning of the affray, and before the fight began, Billy Patterson ran into the crowd to persuade them not to fight, but to make peace and be friends. But his efforts for peace were unavailing, and while making them some of the crowd in the general melee struck Billy Patterson a severe blow from behind. Billy at once became fighting mad, and cried out at the top of his voice, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" No one could or would tell him who was the guilty party. He then proposed to give any man a hundred dollars who would tell him "Who struck Billy Patterson." From $100 he rose to $1,000; but not $1,000 would induce any man to tell him "Who struck Billy Patterson." And years afterward, in his will, he related the above facts and bequeathed $1,000 to be paid by his executors to the man who would tell "Who struck Billy Patterson." His will is recorded in the ordinary's office at Canesville, Franklin county, Ga., and anyone curious about the matter can there find it and verify the preceding statements.

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorsed Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only reliable remedy in the market. Its a good rule that won't work both ways.

Dipping Sheep.

The effect of a dip is to free the sheep from all external parasites as ticks, scab, etc., and skin diseases, the cause of some of which are not fully understood. A dip of twelve pounds of tobacco and six pounds of flour of sulphur, to fifty gallons of water, is one that has been so generally used, that it can be recommended. Some add to this a little concentrated lye, a pound or so, and about the same quantity of arsenic. If arsenic is used, proper caution should be exercised, and the poisonous nature of the mixture kept in mind. The sheep are dipped while the mixture is warm. Those who have had experience claim that the dip of tobacco and sulphur will do all that can be accomplished by the use of arsenic. It may not be generally understood that sulphur does not dissolve in the dip; hence, in order that each sheep may get its share, the mixture, while in use, should be frequently stirred up from the bottom, and the sulphur thus thoroughly diffused.—American Agriculturist.

You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

The Temperature of the Sun.

The following, from a French scientific journal, shows how astronomers and scientists have differed on this important question:

The question of the temperature of the sun, of the highest importance, both from an astronomical and a meteorological point of view, has been the subject of investigation by many eminent savans, but we cannot say that a solution has yet been approached. When we consider the immense progress that has been made in cosmical physics it would appear that the temperature of the sun ought to have been known long ago. Newton, among early investigators of the problem, tried to determine it, and after him all the scientists who have been occupied with calorimetry have followed his example. All have believed themselves successful, and have formulated their results with great confidence. We give, in the chronological order of publication of the results, the temperature (in centigrade degrees) found by each of them: Newton, 1,669,300 degrees; Pouillet, 1,461 degrees; Zœllner, 102,000 degrees; Secchi, 5,344,840 degrees; Ericsson, 2,726,900 degrees; Fizeau, 7,500 degrees; Waterston, 9,000,000 degrees; Spoerer, 27,000 degrees; H. Sainte Claire Deville, 9,500 degrees; Soret, 5,801,846 degrees; Vicaire, 1,398 degrees; Vielle, 1,500 degrees; Rossetti, 20,000 degrees. There probably does not exist in the annels of science a more astonishing contradiction than that revealed in these figures. One is struck in reading, on the one hand, the names of these masters, and on the other hand those figures, which vary from 1,400 degrees to 9,000,000 degrees. The subject will probably be discussed a long time yet before anything like an agreement in the result be arrived at. The most important laws of physical sciences are brought into play, and we still want a vigorous enunciation which may be utilized to any extent. It is in the principles themselves that the unknown and uncertain are found, leading to these contradictions. All the misunderstandings as to the basis of the question have long been got rid of, and the problem is brought back to its simplest and most precise expression. Without touching on the question of the constitution of the sun, what is sought is simply the temperature, of a supposed homogeneous star, all the strata of which have the same temperature, of a mass equal to the real mass of the sun, of an emissive power equal to to the mean emissive power of the surface. Thus the question is put with precisson and clearness, and we need not despair of seeing it some day fully solved.

Self Praise.

Conceited people may be divided into classes—the offensive and the non-offensive. There are people who have a very good opinion of themselves, but they manifest it in such a way as is far from making them disagreeable. Perhaps they talk a little too much about themselves and their wonderful performances, and still the listener is interested and attracted rather than repelled. The man who has done nothing that is worth doing becomes tedious when he talks of himself, but when one has made a great invention or discovered anything wonderful, or explored any rare line of study, or accomplished a grand success in the line of practical business, we like to hear all about the matter, just how he did it and what personal results it has brought to him.

What looks like self conceit may be after all only the overflow of animal spirits. One who is perfectly sound in mind and body may be expected to carry his head a little higher than other people, and walk with a somewhat more pretentious tread. Sidney Smith has said that he thought Christians in general were not grateful enough for the gift of personal vanity. We presume that he had in mind the natural exuberance which makes a man satisfied with himself and every thing about him. Who does not prefer the society of such persons rather than those who show their conceit by never seeming to be satisfied with any thing.

There are forms of conceit of which we have nothing extenuating to say. The worst of these appears in the habit of habitually depreciating others. In doing this the detractor is all the time proclaiming to the world, "I am not as other men are. Just look at me! I have never fallen as these people have." Perhaps not outwardly. Some people are never content to hear an allusion to the good deeds or the bright sayings of others without calling attention to some corresponding exploit of their own. Conceited people will also manage, by a certain adroitness, to give such a turn to conversation as will enable them to bring in some reminder of their own prowess—oblivions of the fact that they have told the same story to the same people a dozen times before.

A Remarkable Coincidence.

It is a matter of journalistic record, that some years since, a schooner set sail from Baltimore, having on board a crew of thirteen men. By a most singular freak of nature, the entire force was attacked by a skin disease, which manifested itself in large ulcerated sores on the arms and hands, wholly incapacitating the men from duty. The result was that the vessel was towed back to the city where the men were placed in the hospital.—Moral! Had Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases been used in the first place, the crew would have recovered in from 12 to 48 hours.

THE THISTLE OF SCOTLAND.—The thistle is the national badge of Scotland. How it came to be so is here told. Once during an invasion of Scotland by the Danes, they arranged to surprise the Scottish army. It was not considered fair or warlike to attack an enemy in the darkness of the night. So they resolved to march barefooted, that their tramp might not be heard. Silently, slowly, but steadily they drew nearer and nearer to the Scottish camp. In a few minutes the surprise would be complete. Suddenly a loud cry of pain rang through the air, startling both invader and invaded. The Scots sprang to their feet, seized their weapons, charged upon their foe, and defeated them with great slaughter. The cry that saved them came from one of the Danish soldiers, who with his bare foot had trod on a thistle.

Majolica Ware.

From the earliest period of its production the ancient art pottery of Italy—called in the language of the country, "majolica," has attracted the attentions of connoisseurs. For a long time it was known in England as "Raffaelle ware" or "Faenza ware," and before curiosity hunters had scoured the country, specimens could be obtained in any bric-a-brac shop of Italy for cents, where dollars would now fail to secure it. The common belief that Raffaelle had himself been a painter of plates and dishes, was the cause of wide spread appreciation. Evidence is, however, totally wanting in this direction, and although stripped of interest and no longer attributed to the great painter of Urbino, majolica ware, from its intrinsic value, is highly prized.

It is certainly one of the most important items in the category of decorative art, arising as it did from a study of the ornamented pottery produced by the Arabs in Spain, and which during the middle ages were largely imported into Italy. During the fifteenth, sixteenth and early part of the seventeenth century, majolica was a great staple manufacture of Italy. Manufactories were founded and fostered by the princes and the status of the workmen was placed above the condition of the ordinary artisan; the artists were "maestri" enjoying wide repute, and the cities which were the principal seats of the manufacture acquired dignity and importance. Faenza, Urbino, Castel Durante, Gubbio and Pesaro, were the great centres of the majolica fabrication, and the princes of Urbino were its most noted patrons.

Specimens known as "lustred" are the rarest, and these are of various kinds, the "iridescent colors," "reflets metalliques," "colori cangianti" or madre-perla are really pigments produced by metals deposited on the surface of the ware by some means unknown at the present day. The secret of one of them, the ruby lustre, died out early in the sixteenth century, and seems to have confined to one ceramic artist, Giorgio of Gubbio. The specimens of this lustre date from 1500 to 1550, and happy is the possessor of a cabinet containing a genuine specimen. The earliest known example of Giorgio's ware with the signature of the master is 1518 and the latest, 1537. Probably the finest collection of works of this character, is the Soulages collection, formed by M. Jules Soulages during a period between 1830 and 1840, and purchased by the English Government in 1856 for the South Kensington Museum for the sum of $65,000.

The Origin of the Plow.

The origin of the plow and wheeled carriages was the subject of a paper lately read by Mr. Taylor before the London Anthropological Institute. He believed that the first agricultural implement was a pointed stick, which at a later stage of development was bent at the end into the form of a hoe and had the point hardened in the fire. After the lapse of ages a large implement of the same shape came into use. It was not employed like the hoe or "hack," but drawn by men or oxen. Among our own Indians, in the traditional lore of Sweden, in Egypt's picture pages of a remote past, there are more or less distinct traces of the above transition. Greek, Egyptian, Chinese severally possessed the germ, so to speak, of the modern plow. The spur was next shod with iron, the more efficiently to fulfill the purpose of the romer or share. Virgil lived at a time when the plow had reached a very high stage of perfection. It was then constructed with a wheel and an upward projecting handle, like the best form of plow in use in Europe in the eighteenth century, and, it might well be added, like the plows still employed near Mantua and Venice at the present day. Dr. Taylor is unwilling to concede that the plow was the progenitor of the vehicle of to-day; he assigns that honor to the sled, as is more probably just. It would soon be found that the introduction of rollers beneath the sled would facilitate its traction. But as it was not necessary that every part of the roller should rest on the ground, the diameter of the middle was reduced with obvious advantage. Slowly in this way the wheel, solid throughout and rigidly attached to the axle, come into existence. The wheel and axle of Scythians revolved together. Even now some of the picturesque carts of Italy and Portugal have drum-wheels fixed on axles which revolve in bearings like forks open below. From the rude harnessing of the yoke attached to the horns or withers of oxen at first, the advance to the present method was also gradual. But it is easy to follow this and the other improvements in the plow and wheeled vehicles up to the their existing condition through the aid of recorded history

Worthy of Praise.

As a rule we do not recommend Patent Medicines, but when we know of one that really is a public benefactor, and does positively cure, then we consider it our duty to impart that information to all. Electric Bitters are truly a most valuable medicine, and will surely cure Billiousness, Fever and Ague, Stomach, Liver and Kidney Complaints, even where all other remedies fail. We know whereof we speak, and can freely recommend them to all. Sold at fifty cents a bottle at PRAISE.—As a general thing we are too chary in praising and encouraging the efforts of the young, too free in criticising and depreciating them. Many a child's powers in various directions are thrust back into inactivity by the cold unappreciative reception they meet with. Children quickly adopt the sentiments of their elders, and soon learn to put the same value on their own powers that others do. The parent, the teacher, and the employer can easily teach lessons of self depreciation which may cling through life, and forever prevent the development of powers that under more favorable auspices might have proved a blessing to the community; or on the other hand, by cheerful encouragement and wholesome commendation, they may nourish many a tiny germ of ability and talent that may one day come to be a mighty influence, a perceptible power in the world.

A Physician of Great Prominence in thirty-sixth street, New York city was unable to even help Mr. Wm. McKee, of Patterson, N. J., suffering the agonies always attendant upon diseased kidneys. As an honest man and practitioner he prescribed and cured him by using one bottle of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

August sunsets have strayed into December skies, and one is tempted to think nature has made a misdeal, and while shuffling weather cards for Vennor dropped an April in place of a snow bank. It is a program to which northern fire sufferers are no doubt resigned, and one other person finds no fault.

Perhaps the stormy debate on the lunacy or sanieness of Guiteau may have had a tendency to produce atmospheric clearness. If Scoville should fail in establishing his clients claim to the title of crazy, he has been more than successful in developing what ailed those who procured for a man of such sanitary characteristics an appointment to a foreign city. If a woman had wheedled the president into sending such a fellow to the post office she would deem it necessary to self-preservation to prove first, last and all the time that much learning, travel or sunstroke had made him mad. Any evidence from Jack's climbing the bean stalk, to the corrupting consequences arising from the general use of Paris green, would be pressed into service to show the slightest deviation from his normal condition as it is portrayed. Isn't it odd that boys and girls brought up in the same family do their work so different.

GRANGE ADDRESS.

The following address was delivered by Dr. Howell, at an anniversary meeting of Macon Grange, held on Friday, Dec. 9th, 1881:

Worthy Master, Visiting Friends, Brother and Sister Patrons:—On this anniversary of ours I wish one could have addressed you who could have brought new, fresh and juicy thoughts; one who could brush away the mist of years and for one moment bring back the pleasant memories of the past; one who could have touched with a master's hand the questions of to-day, and withal lent a charm to his words sweeter than a mother's lullaby. I cannot do this, therefore bear with me, and should my theme not be interesting then look at the smiling face of Flora; should my thoughts lack the delicious flow of language, then in imagination taste the luscious fruits gathered by the hand of Pomona; should they be dry and sombre, like the dead leaves of autumn then think of the mysterious life hid a way in the germs of the gathered grains of Ceres. But, and all men say but, sisters, do you not think, that that man must be dull indeed who cannot sit the one-third part of an hour, charmed by the graces of Flora, Pomona and Ceres; and I promise, brothers, not to detain you much longer than that.

I have seen on the wall of some one of your dwellings a picture, beautiful and expressive, "From Shore to Shore." Leaning over the brow of the boat is a little girl and boy looking toward the distant shore, then there sits a listless and dreamy girl resting her arms on the side of the boat; next a beautiful girl trails in the water a wreath of water lilies, while leaning toward her is a young man, eager, and as if impatiently waiting for some reply; then there stands the same man now in the full vigor of manhood, and sitting by him a mother on whose knee leans a little child. In the stern of the boat sits an old man resting on his cane, by him an old lady. Near the center of the boat is Old Time, he who never grows weary by the flight of years; he is rowing the boat toward the farther shore. From this picture "From Shore to Shore," I have taken my theme, "The Voyage of Life," or rather thoughts incidental to the voyage.

The voyage began, but we will hasten by that period, when first we looked into our mother's eyes and played with her apron strings; eyes that were beautiful then, eyes that are beautiful still, although we may no longer see them. Soon thereafter, in the sunny days of May, we, the boys and girls, ran in the fields, waded in the streams, gathered blue violets from grassy banks and snug fence corners; then sitting in some sheltered, warm and sunny place bit off their heads and called them Jump-up-Johnies. We gathered the leaves of the narrow-leaved dock, the dandelion and the cowslip, our mothers cooked them in a pot and called them "greens." Those were not juicy thoughts, they were juicy 'greens.'—In leafy June the cows pastured in the meadow, the whippoorwill sung its evening song, the robin and the bluebird waked the morning with their music, and we, the boys, helped to build little playhouses, in shady corners, where little girls played with dolls. We caught fish in the deep holes, where the eddying waters of the brook had washed out the earth, and learned to swim and dive in the deep places at the bend of the creek.

July and August came and harvest. We carried to the harvest men their lunch, and gathered up the sheaves in dozens, drank water from the jug, or what was more difficult still, from the bung of a wooden water keg, and often some strong harvester, with helping hand, would lift the jug and while the face was well turned ready for a drink, flood you with the first gurgle of its water, and then laugh with inward satisfaction. Scenes of childhood coming back in all their freshness are not juicy thoughts, neither are they new. They are crystalized memories of a mist-covered past, just as rocks, and hills and trees are but crystallized thoughts of the Almighty, thoughts that were in his mind at the first dawning of creation.

Gold and purple tinted leaved autumn and snowy winter came and went and went and came again, until a time in the voyage of life of which the poet writes, and of which I scarce dare speak, yet which comes to many of us. The poet puts it thus:

> Come chosen one and let us dwell
> Amid some sweet sequestered grove
> Whose lofty elms and clambering vines,
> Do thickly twine their arms above.
> O then shall love find happiness,
> And joy to break the hallowed tear,
> While still the freighted bark of time,
> Floats down through many a future year.

It was simply nature giving back to her children one draught of Eden's sweetness, and then passing the cup on. This part of the voyage was short; it came like the mists of the morning that hangs on the Macon, it disappears like smoke of a dream; memories that give pleasure in the quiet hours of memory, but we hasten from them.

Little drops of water from the rill, that form the streams that make the river, so your thoughts and mine form the rills that form the streams that make the great river of thought,—a river on whose current rides the ship of state. Do you get the idea that there is a constant and ever-flowing river of thought running from the beginning on until the end of time?—That that river is composed of your thoughts and mine, added to the thoughts of those who have lived before us? That theology, temperance, law, medicine, grange, politics and, indeed, all the arts and sciences are but streams flowing into the river.—That when you and I first reasoned and expressed those reasons we added to the stream that touches the beginning, the middle, and end of a nation's life. It is on this river sails the ship of which the poet says:

> "Thou too sail on, O, ship of State, > Sail on, O Union, strong and great."

Now and then a man like Conkling tries to withstand or turn the current; he makes a ripple, and then goes down forever, while a Washington or a Lincoln, running with or in advance of the current, is not forgotten in centuries. The current of thought for the last century has been the unalienable right of man, such as found expression in the voices of freedom. It was but a rill as it came from England in 1820. Since then by a constant numerical increase of its advocates, by which the current of influence grew stronger and stronger, it became so strong that nothing could turn it from its course. Although the rill became a river whose main current was freedom of thought—an independent people and freedom from slavery. The first two accomplished, a free thinking people became indignant that their flag, the emblem of liberty itself, should represent a nation half free and half slave.

To-day vegetation grows luxuriant on battle-fields fertilized by human blood, but the shackles have fallen from three million slaves.

What is the current of the river today? Put in the most practical way that I can put it, it is what shall a man give for a loaf of bread. The question is one of labor and capital.—Vanderbilt says give so much. Gould says give so much. The combined railroad kings say give so much. The speculator says give so much. The laborer says how much must I give for a loaf of bread? Who shall answer the question, or decide between labor or capital?

What is money, or capital? Examine the currents of the river,—they are Money, Labor, Grange. The Almighty hid it away in the clefts of the rocks, and weighed it down with boulders of granite, but the decaying hills crumbled, to-day it walks forth concentrated power. It knows no master. It is good and evil, all in one. It brings the choicest blessings of civilization. It lays the lash on the back of the slave, and confines the innocent in prison. It builds cottages and fills homes with plenty. It oppresses men and takes bread from the drunkard's family. It sends the gospel of the lowly Nazarine to the Hindoos. It makes the Hindoo a cooly slave, and works him in the fields of South America.

What is laber? Labor is diffused power. It digs in the mines, works in the fields, holds the plow, reaps the grain. It toils, sleeps and eats; sleeps, eats and toils. Money concentrates, labor diffuses power. Money lords, labor crouches. Money says give so much, labor says how much shall I give. It is not strange that there is a conflict between the two, and this is the question of to-day.—Who shall deside the question? The grange. What is it? It is, in its highest conception organized power, force combined. It is an organization of a million of men and women pouring a stream of thought into the great river of thought. Men and women accustomed to labor and to think, not broken down with the vices of life nor nursed in the garden of aristocracy.

It took a century of years to accomplish freedom. It may be a century of years before we accomplish our object, but the stream now a million strong will be ever growing, ever increasing until the time may come when we shall answer this question, and indeed we will, if it is ever answered: What are the combined forces in the grange? Man and woman. Man may stand alone environed by his own intellectual power, he may look up at the heavens and with his finger mark out the course of the planets, he may grasp the lightning and send it on his missions, he may seize and analyze the sunlight while yet on its swift flying wings. This he may do and much more, but in all that elevates manhood into a truer and nobler equality there does and must stand by his side woman. Recognizing this fact, the gate of our hall opens as easily to the gentle hand of woman as to our rougher hands. She stands our equal on this floor with the same equal right of the ballot. Combining then the intellectual force of man with the moral force of woman, we think the time is not far distant when we shall turn the current of the river into channels of equal justice, and hold in our hands the balance that shall decide the questions between labor and capital. One word more and I am done. The Atlantic ocean washes our eastern coast, then arise the Alleghany range, from there the broad valley of the Mississippi stretches out to where the Rocky Mountains lift their lofty peaks, beyond them the Sierra Nevadas and then the deep ocean. Some of our members have left the Rocky Mountains behind them, stood a moment on the Sierras looking into the depths of an unknown ocean beyond. We hear their voices no longer. They are not. Their voyage in life has ended.

> The wind that sweeps the wintry sky,
> No more disturbs their calm repose,
> Than summer evenings latest sigh
> That shuts the rose.

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorses Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only reliable remedy in the market. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

It might have been that the sky was green, and the grass serenely blue;
It might have been that grapes on thorns, and figs on thistles grew;
It might have been that rainbows before the showers came;
It might have been that lambs were fierce, and bears and tigers tame;
It might have been that cold would melt, and summer heat would freeze!
It might have been that ships at sea would sail against the breeze—
And there may be worlds unknown, dear, where we might find the change
From all that we have seen or heard, to others just as strange—
But it never could be wise, dear, in haste to act or speak;
It could never be noble to harm the poor and weak;
It never could be kind, dear, to give a needless pain;
It never could be honest, dear, to sin for greed of gain
And there could not be a world, dear, while God is true above,
When right and wrong are governed by any law but love.

AMUSING MISTAKES.

BLUNDERS IN SCIENCE AND SOCIETY.

Chambers' Journal is responsible for the following:

Droll mistakes are of course endless. Here are a few culled at random:

Before the Paris Exhibition was open to the public, and when the building contained only the cases which were being ranged for the respective exhibits, quite a crowd one Sunday flattened their noses against the glass entrance-door to look at the contents of a case containing a pair of boots, a battered hat, an overcoat much the worse for wear, and a necktie of many colors, the report being circulated that the objects belonged to King Dagobert, Robespierre, or Charles X. The enigma was solved by a painter arriving and throwing off his blouse and slippers, and commencing to dress himself amidst, what was a puzzle to him, loud laughter, in which the police joined.

Referring to mistaken ideas about relics, recalls the story in a German paper about a certain professor, which is a parallel to of Pickwick. This German antiquary made the delightful discovery that a stone placed over a stable door bore the inscription 1081. "I must have this stone in my collection, cost what it may," thought the savant. Calling a tenant farmer, who was the proprietor, the professor said to him eagerly: "Did you not obtain this stone from the castle ruin on the hill yonder?"

"It may be that my grandfather fetched it thence when he built the stable," was the reply.

The antiquary then asked what he would take for the stone.

"Since you appear to have a fancy for it," said the farmer, "give me forty guldens, and I will bring it to your house."

"Rather a large sum," said the professor; "but bring it to my residence, and you shall have the money."

When in due course the farmer brought the stone upon a truck, the zealous antiquary turned it over to refresh his eyes with a sight of its venerable chronological inscription, not without anxiety that it might have been damaged in its removal.

"Why, what's this?" he exclaimed. This is NOT THE RIGHT STONE.

On the stone I bought from you was the date 1081, while this bears the very modern date of 1801, which proves that the other was exactly 720 years older than this."

"Do not trouble about that," said the smart peasant. "The masons, you see, sir, turned the stone upside down when they set it in the doorway, because it fitted better that way. You can turn it whichever way you like, but of course I must have the money agreed upon."

The professor, it is said, at once paid the whole sum, and gave the man a present besides to take away the stone and say no more about the matter.

The numerous instances of mistaken identity on record are constantly receiving new additions. There is an amusing account of a French lady who was very jealous of her husband, and determined to watch his movements. On one occasion, when he told her he was going to Versailles, she followed, keeping him in sight until she missed him in a passage leading to the railway station. Looking about her for a few minutes she saw a man coming out of a glove-shop with a rather overdressed lady. Making sure from the distance that this man was her husband, she came suddenly up and without a word of warning, gave him three or four boxes on the ear. The instant the gentleman turned around she discovered her mistake, and, at the same time, caught sight of her husband, who had merely called at a tobacconist's, and was crossing the street. There was nothing for it but to faint in the arms of the gentleman whose ears she had boxed, while the other lady moved away to avoid a scene. The stranger, astonished to find an unknown lady in his arms, was further startled by a gentleman seizing him by the collar and demanding what he meant by embracing that lady.

"Why, she boxed my ears and then fainted," exclaimed the aggrieved gentleman.

"She is my wife!" shouted the angry husband, "and would never have struck you without a cause" And worse than angry words would probably have followed had not the cause of the whole misunderstanding recovered sufficiently to explain how it all happened.

A London paper gave an account of another case of mistaken identity in connection with a distinguished personage. An aged couple in high life, who were celebrating their golden wedding, by way of concluding the festivities on that occasion adjourned with the children and their respective belongings to the theater, in which to accommodate so large a party two boxes had been knocked into one. The eldest, who strongly resembled his Royal Highness stepped forward and occupied the center seat with the ladies of the party beside him; upon which the orchestra struck up the national anthem, and the audience rose to their feet en masse, the innocently unconcerned party, of course, doing the same themselves.

There is no doubt that people of rather unusual proportions had an awkward time of it when the Claimant was at large. A story goes that a corpulent gentleman once took a box at Canterbury Hall. First one person, then another eyed him, until at length the counterpart of the Claimant became the center of observation. A cheer arose, the singing was suspended, and an ovation was the result. The supposed Sir Roger rose and bowed his acknowledgment. But this was not enough; he must speak. The manager announced that "Sir Roger" had a cold and could not speak. Fearing the consequence, if the audience discovered their mistake, he had the "Claimant" removed as quietly as possible in a cab sent in a roundabout way to his home.

THE INTOXICATED BRICKLAYER

who squared up to a post, and maintained a one-sided fight affords an absurd illustration of mistaken identity; but if we can rely upon newspaper reports, such ludicrous incidents are surpassed by what is said to have happened in the neighborhood of Morecambe. Sometime ago the body of what was supposed by the discoverer to be a human being was found lying on the beach near the place above named, having undoubtedly been left there by the receding tide. The usual preparation for holding an orthodox inquest were put in force and kept going, until the examination of medical man proved the suspected human corpse to be but the corpse of a monkey, which had probably been thrown overboard from some ship, and which so closely resembled in appearance a human being as to require a doctor to tell the difference. Such a mistake looks either like a gross flattery upon a dead monkey or an unconscious satire upon human nature, calculated to delight all believers in the Darwin theory.

A not unnatural mistake was that made by the policeman who arrested a Dublin youth under what appeared to be

SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES.

The young gentleman referred to was at a party in the Irish capital, and joined with great spirits in a game of forfeits. Amid the fun and merriment it was proposed that, to regain his forfeit, he should pay a visit to the turf stacks on the adjacent canal bank and bring some turf into the room. Thinking only of the diverson that his return with an armful of turf would create, he immediately hastened to the place indicated, filled his arms, and was in the act of returning, when to his horror he became aware that a policeman was in pursuit. Almost paralyzed with fright, he dropped his burden and awaited the officer's arrival.

"O, constable," he stammered, "I've been playing a game of forfeits, and was told to bring turf from the canal into the house."

"Not a bad story, but you'll have to come with me," declared the constable.

There had been continued complaints of turf-pilfering, so, regardless of his protestations, the unlucky youth was locked up for the night. The first intimation his merry-making friends received of his whereabouts was when next morning they heard that he had been explaining the mistake to the presiding magistrate, who fortunately comprehended the case in a moment and dismissed it.

A MISCONCEPTION AS LUDICROUS,

but in which the policeman figured less creditably than the one just referred to, took place in the Isle of Man. At a Deemster's court in Ramsay a Jew was about to be sworn to give evidence. As Jews are always sworn on the Old Testament, and not the New, the Deemster requested the constable in attendance to fetch an Old one. After awhile that worthy returned, and handed to the witness an ancient-looking dilapidated book, which, on being examined, proved to be a New Testament. The Deemster's attention being called to it, he asked the constable why he had not brought an Old Testament, to which the innocent reply was: "Please your Honor, that was the oldest one I could find."

An amusing blunder was once made by a dyer, who was given a farmer's four flannel shirts to be dyed a fast gray color, instead of which he dyed them blue. On wearing the garments, the color came out of them so that, as the farmer curiously expressed it, "he looked like a red Indian;" and as it cost him several shillings in baths to turn himself into a white man again, he sued the dyer and obtained damages.

A LUDICROUS MISTAKE

is reported to have occurred at the opening of a bazar in Glasgow, at which the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne were present. A distinguished clergyman was called upon by the Chairman to conduct the devotional exercises; and the reverend gentleman had commenced to read, when four pipers of a Highland regiment, owing to some misunderstanding, struck up with a wild shriek on the bag-pipes, by way of a preliminary, "The Campbells are Coming." The music was promptly stopped; but the solemnity of the proceedings had of course been shaken.

An embarrassing incident, we are told, once happened to an Englishman in Rome. Entering one of the churches in that city, as a service was going on, he sat quietly down, placing his hat on the ground beside him. Some little time passed, and as there seemed no immediate prospect of the ceremony coming to an end, he reached for his hat, in order to leave, but was stopped by an unseen hand, which grasped from behind. Thinking some custodian of the church wished him to remain till the end of the service, he again waited; but his patience becoming exhausted, he again reached for his hat, and was again prevented from going in the same manner. Convinced that the service was some really important one, the Englishman once more delayed his departure; but at the expiration of a quarter of an hour he determined to go in spite of etiquette, so he repeated the same maneuver in the direction of his head-covering. A third time the same hand detained him; but as he determinedly resisted its grasp, a voice behind him exclaimed in English: "I beg your pardon, but that is my hat you are taking." Such was the fact; he had been detained all this while because each time he had reached in mistake for the hat of another stranger placed in close proximity to his own.

The Latest Slang Words.

Quite a lot of new slang has been opened up for trade. This is nearly altogether family slang for the use of ladies, and if they wish to be abreast of the times they will take out their pencil and tablets and note down the specimen "catouche" is a very new word, and means nice, sweet, pleasant. Coffee, for instance, may be catouche; so may John Henry or Eliza Jane. When a girl is "flick," she is knowing. If she is "fenoy," she is just the reverse of knowing. If you wish to convey to your heart's idol the idea that you adore her transcendent beauty, just tell her she is "oppressive." "A Johnny-boy" is a new variety of the genus homo who knows how to dance like an angel—supposing that angels would so far forget themselves as to dance—who wears good clothes, and who is an idiot in every other respect. The feminine equivalent of the "Johnny-boy" is generally called "Evangeline." If you disapprove of a place or a person, or a party, you may either refer to it as a "snide," "gummy," or "toppy." Excessive admiration wrecks itself upon expressions in such words as "balmy," "harmonious," "gullitive." "Gullitive" seems to mean a great many things. It is a sort of non-committal word, which can be used to fill up a sentence or express a doubtful opinion.

"The rattle of the printing press," says L. J. Jennings, is to the journalist who has once taken the complaint, what the smell of the foot-lights is to the old actor.

The Value of Cereals as Food.

In a lecture on the chemistry of food, Prof. Church gives some points in regard to diet which are suggestive and practical. In speaking of the cereals or grains, he says the best of all for bread-making is wheat. This is believed to be due principally to the character of the nitrogeneous matter of wheat. The main constituent is fibrine, and it can be readily obtained for examination by making a little flour into a dough and water, and then washing the starch out by a means of a stream of water. There is then left a grayish-yellow, tough, elastic mass which is gluten. Speaking of peas, beans, and various kinds of pulse, it was pointed out how much more nearly the different kinds agree in composition than the cereals do. The great drawback to the use of various kinds of pulse is that they are difficult to digest. They are an excellent theoretical food, according to analysis, but they are a severe tax on digestion. Of all the beans, none presents a better typical food than the Soy bean. Lentils have been much spoken of lately as a good food, and they undoubtedly approach to a good typical food, but they are bitter, astiringent, and not easy of digestion. It has come to be pretty well recognized that the food of man doing hard work should have flesh formers to heat-givers in proportion of 1 to 4½, and that the food of a child should have 1 to 7. Bread gives 1 to 7½, while the heat-givers are even more than a child wants; so it is not a good food by itself. Pulse gives (taking an average) 1 to 2½, which is far too small. In the calculations heat-givers are reckoned as starch. Potatoes give 1 to 16, according to the latest analysis, the old, 1 to 8, being evidently in error. Onions are 2 to 4 an excellent proportion, though onions are not much in favor as food. In looking at the relative values of flesh-formers and the heat-givers in foods, the actual amount of water must not be forgotten.

A Remarkable Coincidence,

It is a matter of journalistic record, that some years since, a schooner set sail from Baltimore, having on board a crew of thirteen men. By a most singular freak of nature, the entire force was attacked by a skin disease, which manifested itself in large ulcerated sores on the arms and hands, wholly incapacitating the men from duty. The result was that the vessel was towed back to the city where the men were placed in the hospital.—Moral! Had Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases been used in the first place, the crew would have recovered in from 12 to 48 hours.

Chip Dirt for Fruit Trees.

The best fertilizer in use in setting fruit trees of all kinds is partially or thoroughly decomposed chip dirt. We made use of the material for the first time some twenty years ago in planting an apple orchard, and it was a wonder to those not in the secret what caused the trees to make such a fine growth the first season, and afterwards, too, for that matter. This experiment was so satisfactory that when we set our new orchard we made a liberal use of this material with the same satisfactory result. These trials have proved to our satisfaction that chip dirt is the very best material to mix in the soil as you plant the tree that can possibly be used, for the reason that it holds moisture and is full of the elements of plant food; therefore, it promotes a most luxuriant, natural and healthy growth. Repeated trials have satisfied me that a tree is not only more sure to live, but will make double the growth the first year (especially if a dry season) if some two bushels of chip dirt are properly used in its setting, than it would without it. A single trial will convince the most skeptical that the best possible use which can be made of this valuable material is to apply it to the soil in planting trees, in order to push forward the tree during the first precarious stages of its growth.

Farmers and Mechanics,

If you wish to avoid great danger and trouble, besides a no small bit of expense, at this season of the year, you should take prompt steps to keep disease from your household. The system should be cleansed, blood purified, stomach and bowels regulated, and prevent and cure diseases arising from Spring malaria. We know of nothing that will so perfectly and surely do this as Electric Bitters, and at the trifling cost of fifty cents a bottle.—Exchange. Sold by

Terrible Accident

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye.—Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to the pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the Liver and Kidneys, Cures constipation, and all weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all our druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

OZONE!

A New Process for Preserving all Perishable Articles, Animal and Vegetable, from Fermentation and Putrifaction, retaining their Odor and Flavor.

"OZONE—Purified air, active state of oxygen."—WEBSTER.

This preservative is not a liquid, pickle or any of the old and exploded processes, but is simply and purely OZONE, as produced and applied by an entirely new process. Ozone is the antiseptic principle of every substance, and possesses the power to preserve animal and vegetable structures from decay. There is nothing on the face of the earth liable to decay or spoil which OZONE, the new Preservative, will not preserve for all time in a perfectly fresh and palatable condition.

The value of OZONE as a natural preserver has been known to our ablest chemists for years, but until now no means of producing it in a practical inexpensive, and simple manner have been discovered. Microscopic observations prove that decay is due to septic matter or minute germs that develop and feed upon animal and vegetable structures. OZONE, applied by the Prentiss method, seizes and destroys these germs at once, and thus preserves. At our office in Cincinnati can be seen almost every article that can be thought of preserved, by this process, and every visitor is welcome to come in, taste, smell, take away with him, and test in every way the merits of OZONE as a preservative. We will also preserve, free of charge, any article that is brought or sent postpaid to us, and return it to the sender, for him to keep and test.

EGGS can be treated at a cost of less than one dollar a thousand dozen, and be kept in an ordinary room six months or more, thoroughly preserved, the yolk held in its normal condition, and the eggs as fresh and perfect as on the day they were treated, and will sell as strictly "choice." The advantage in preserving eggs is readily seen; there are seasons when they can be bought for 8 or 10 cents a dozen, and by holding them can be sold for an advance of from one hundred to three hundred per cent. One man with this method can preserve 5,000 dozen a day.

FRUITS may be permitted to ripen in their native climate, and can be transported to any part of the world. The juice expressed from fruits can be held for any indefinite period without fermentation—hence the great value of this process for producing a temperance beverage. Milk and cider can be held perfectly sweet any length of time.

VEGETABLES can be kept for an indefinite period in their natural condition, retaining their odor and flavor, treated in their original packages, at a small expense. All grain, flour, meal, etc., are held in their normal condition.

FRESH MEATS, such as beef, mutton, veal, pork, poultry, game, fish, etc., preserved by this method, can be shipped to Europe, subjected to atmospheric changes, and return to this country in a state of perfect preservation.

BUTTER AFTER BEING TREATED BY THIS PROCESS will NOT become RANCID.

Dead human bodies, treated before decomposition sets in, can be held in a natural condition for weeks without puncturing the skin or mutilating the body in any way. Hence the great value of Ozone to undertakers.

There is no change in the slightest particular in the appearance of any article thus preserved, and no trace of any foreign or unnatural odor or taste.

The process is so simple that a child can operate it as well and successfully as a man. There is no expensive apparatus or machinery required.

A room filled with different articles, such as eggs, meat, fish, etc., can be treated at one time, without additional trouble or expense.

☞ In fact, there is nothing that Ozone will not preserve. Think of everything you can think of, and then remember that we guarantee that Ozone will preserve it in exactly the condition you want it for any length of time. If you will remember this, it will save asking questions as to whether Ozone will preserve this or that article—it will preserve any thing and every thing you can think of.

There is not a township in the United States in which a live man can not make any amount of money, from $1,000 to $10,000 a year, that he pleases. WE DESIRE TO GET A LIVE MAN INTERESTED IN EACH COUNTY OF THE UNITED STATES, in whose hands we can place this Preservative, and through him secure the business which each county ought to produce.

A FORTUNE Awaits any man who secures control of OZONE in any Township or County.

A. C. Bowen, Marion, Ohio, cleared $2,000 in two months. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
Woods Brothers, Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, made $6,000 on eggs purchased in July and sold November 1st. $2 for a test package was their first investment.
C. K. Raymond, Morristown, Belmont County, Ohio, is clearing $2,000 a month in handling and selling Ozone. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
D. F. Webber, Charlotte, Eaton County Mich., has cleared $1,000 a month since August. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
B. Gaylord 80 LaSalle Street, Chicago, is preserving eggs, fruit, etc., for the commission men of Chicago, charging 1½c per dozen for eggs, and other articles in proportion. He is preserving 5,000 dozen eggs a day, and on his business is making $3,000 a month clear. $2 for a test package was his first investment.
The Cincinnati Feed Company, 498 West Seventh Street, is making $5,000 a month handling brewers' malt, preserving and shipping it as feed to all parts of the country. Malt, unpreserved sours in twenty-four hours. Preserved by OZONE it keeps perfectly sweet for months.
These are instances which we have asked the privilege of publishing. There are scores of others. Write to any of the above parties and get the evidence direct.
Now, to prove the absolute truth of every thing we have said in this paper, we propose to place in your hands the means of proving for yourself that we have not claimed half enough. To any person who doubts any of these statements, and who is interested sufficiently to make the trip, we will pay all traveling and hotel expenses for a visit to this city, if we fail to prove any statement that we have made.

HOW TO SECURE A FORTUNE WITH OZONE.

A test package of Ozone, containing a sufficient quantity to preserve one thousand dozen eggs, or other articles in proportion, will be sent to any applicant on recipe of $2. This package will enable the applicant to pursue any line of tests and experiments he desires, and thus satisfy himself as to the extraordinary merits of Ozone as a Preservative. After having satisfied himself, and had time to look the field over to determine what he wishes to do in the future—whether to sell the article to others, or to confine it to his own use, or any other line of policy which is best suited to him and his township or county—we will enter into an arrangement with him that will make a fortune for him and give us good profits. We will give exclusive township or county privileges to the first responsible applicant who orders a test package and desires to control the business in his locality. The man who secures control of Ozone for any special territory will enjoy a monopoly which will surely enrich him.

Don't let a day pass until you have ordered a Test Package, and if you desire to secure an exclusive privilege, we assure you that delay may deprive you of it. for the applications come in to us by scores every mail—many by telegraph.

If you do not care to send money in advance for the test package, we will send it C. O. D.; but this will put you to the expense of charges for return of money. Our correspondence is very large; we have all we can do to attend to the shipping of orders and giving attention to our working agents. Therefore we cannot give attention to letters which do not order Ozone. If you think of any article that you are doubtful about Ozone preserving, remember we GUARANTEE THAT IT WILL PRESERVE IT, NO MATTER WHAT IT IS.

REFERENCES: We desire to call your attention to a class of references which no enterprise or firm based on any thing but the soundest business success and highest commercial merit could secure.

We refer by permission, as to our integrity and to the value of the Prentiss Preservative, to the following gentlemen: Edward C. Boyce, Member Board of Public Works; B. O. Eshelby, City Comptroller; Armor Smith, Jr., Collector Internal Revenue; Wulsin & Worthington, Attorneys; Martin H. Harrell and B. F. Hopkins, county commissioners; W. S. Cappeller, County Auditor; all of Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio. These gentlemen are each familiar with the merits of our Preservative, and know from actual observation that we have without question

THE MOST VALUABLE ARTICLE IN THE WORLD.

The $2 you invest in a test package will surely lead you to secure a township or county, and then your way is absolutely clear to make from $2,000 to $20,000 a year.

A Crucial Test.

Woman is by nature so erratic and inconsistent a creature that it doesn't do to set on even her most marked characteristics. For illustration: The other day old Mr. Pungleup, of Nob Hill, was commenting on the railroad velocity with which young ladies jabber to each other when they meet, without either in the least understanding or replying to what the other says.

"It's just a mean falsehood gotten up by you good-for-nothing men!" said the youngest Pungleup girl, indignantly.

"All right," said her father, benignantly; "we'll try an experiment. I see your friend Miss Gluckerson, coming up the street. Now, I'll wager that new walking suit you want so much, that you can say 'Roast turkey and cranberry-sauce' in response to the half-dozen remarks she makes without her noticing the fact."

"I never heard anything so perfectly absurd," replied Miss P——, "however, I might as well have that suit—it's just too lovely for anything—so I'll just do it to teach you a lesson."

"Mind now," said her father, as the front door-bell rang, "fair play. You musn't change your expression in the least, and you must repeat the sentence in your usual voice and manner—that is to say, in a single breath—all run together as it were."

Just then Miss Gluckerson was shown into the parlor, and through the library door old Mr. P—— heard Miss G—— exclaim, without even the smallest comma in the whole remark:

"O! you lazy thing been here a perfect age don't look at this hat perfect fright going to have flowers set back and how changed why weren't you at the matinee Harry was there."

"Roast turkey and cranberry sauce," rapidly inserted Miss P——, accompanying the words with that peculiar preliminary and concluding gurgle with which all women, for some occult reason, invariably adorn their conversation when desirous of being agreeable.

"Going to Mrs. Bladger's party?" continued Miss Gluckerson, with the serene rattle of a brook over the pebbles. "Molly Smith is going they tell me she paints pa's promised me a phaeton in the spring saw that hateful Mrs. Grupery on the street buff over-skirt and green ruching just fancy."

"Roast turkey and cranberry—"

"O, George Skidmore's mother's dead Ouch! got a flea in my sleeve little beast just eating me up alive bury her next Sunday did you get that edging at Gimps'?"

"Roast turkey and cran—"

"The girls at Clark's are going to graduate next Thursday Jennie Giggles is going to be square cut with inside illusion and white kid boots can't you come around for dinner to-morrow and stay all—"

"Roast turkey and—"

"Night, and show Milly your new basque? That man with a light overcoat stared at me yesterday Jim O'Neill is going East this candy is frightfully stale."

"Roast turkey—"

"Ma thinks Mrs. Brown ain't proper those ferns are just too lovely look at these cuffs clean this morning are my crimps coming out yours ain't Lillie Skippen says you met Charlie Boggs the other night and said something nice about me tell me quick!"

"Roast turk—"

"Why, how perfectly absurd you are, Linda," interrupted the visitor, angrily. "You don't listen to a word I say; I was asking about Charles Boggs, not roast turkey. George Shelley thinks you're awful nice. Now tell me what he did say. Good gracious! what are you hugging me for?"

"And, Tilda," thoughtfully remarked Miss Pungleup, after the matter had been explained, and her father admitted that he had lost by a scratch, "I believe in my heart that if you hadn't thought about Charlie just then I shouldn't have had any new suit this winter."

All of which goes to show that there is at least one subject upon which one may hope to secure the temporary attention of the inscrutable female mind.—San Francisco Post.

And so do Others.

A gentleman of Swedesboro, N. J., says: "I have taken 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' for Kidney Complaint and with the best results." So have thousands of other folks. Those who know 'Favorite Remedy' never think of taking anything else for Kidney Complaint, Blood Diseases, Rheumatism, and scores of common ills. It is a household friend, and costs you only one dollar to put a bottle on your shelf. 'Favorite Remedy' never fails. Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

About Oaths.

It is not the many oaths that make the truth, but the plain single vow that is vowed true.—[Shakespeare.

Oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer cakes, and holdfast is the only dog.—[Shakespeare.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: they are polluted offerings, more abhorred than spotted livers in the sacrifice.—[Shakespeare.

For it comes to pass oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him.—[Shakespeare.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer, for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce.—[Sir Thos. Browne.

Whoever considers the number of absurd and ridiculous oaths necessary to be taken at present in most countries, on being admitted into any society or profession whatever will be less surprised to find prevarication still prevailing where perjury has led the way.—[Abbe Raynal.

A Physician of Great Prominence in thirty-sixth street, New York city was unable to even help Mr. Wm. McKee, of Patterson, N. J., suffering the agonies always attendant upon diseased kidneys. As an honest man and practitioner he prescribed and cured him by using one bottle of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

The best way to prepare a new iron kettle for use is to fill it with clean potato-parings; boil them for an hour or more, then wash the kettle with hot water, wipe it dry, and rub it with a little lard, repeat the rubbing for half a dozen times after using. In this way you will prevent rust, and all the annoyances liable to occur in the use of a new kettle.

Death to rats and vermin, Parsons' Exterminator.

Mistakes in Education.

A girl should be made to understand, from the first, that the education she receives at school is to do for her mind what the scales and exercises do for her fingers in her musical studies; that she is not to study simply to acquire facts, but to get control of her mind. Moreover, she should be taught that it is her duty to look forward to a life-long intellectual activity, so that, when she comes to take full charge of herself, she will direct her mature powers toward some pursuit or line of study which will promote her present or future welfare, and insure to her wholesome mental habits. Especially should her will-power, the force which will, more than any other, make or mar her, receive the most careful training; so that, becoming adult, she will be able to use it physiologically, and determinately turn from the enemies, wounds and serious sorrows that might induce nervous disease, or drive her into a mad-house, to some one of the many subjects of interest in which the world abounds.

The first mistake in the education of girls, and the one fraught with the saddest results, is made when they are allowed to leave childhood too soon.

The second mistake is, permitting growing girls to sit in the house and study when their transparent cheeks tell of anæmia and lowered vitality. So long as there are branches of knowledge which are admirable training for the mind, and can be pursued best out-of-doors, this mistake is inexcusable. It remains to be seen whether the old methods of education in use in boys' schools are the best for girls; they are the best only if they are the most physiological. Girls should be treated as they are, not as they might be under improved habits and conditions.

The third mistake is, making the school-life of girls final, when it ought to be a simple preparation for the intellectual life of the adult woman.

A fourth mistake is, withholding a knowledge of the laws to which woman is subject, in her physical and her mental life, her place in nature and the potential character of her mental state and habits.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Word to Mothers.

Mother should remember it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic, advertised in our columns.

"Sit" and "Set."

Many of the agricultural journals are sorely troubled to know whether a hen sits or sets. If some editor of dignity would set a hen on the nest, and the editors would let her sit, it would be well for the world. Now a man, or woman either, can set a hen, although they cannot sit her; neither can they sit on her, although the old hen might sit on them by the hour if they would allow. A man cannot set on the wash bench; but he could set the basin on it, and neither the basin nor the grammarians would object. He could sit on a dog's tail if the dog were willing, or he might set his foot on it. But if he should set on the aforesaid tail, or sit his foot there, the grammarians as well as the dog would howl. And yet, strange as it may seem, the man might set the tail aside and then sit down, and neither be assailed by the dog or the grammarians.

A Woman's Experience.

Mothers and daughters should feel alarmed when weariness constantly oppresses them. "If I am fretful from exhaustion of vital powers, and the color is fading from my face, Parker's Ginger Tonic gives quick relief. It builds me up and drives away pain and wonderful certainty."—Buffalo lady.

Mr. John B. Gough says that the only time he was ever overcome by embarrassment while addressing an audience was in Providence, R. I., many years ago. He was talking to an audience of children on the subject of good habits, and taking off his hat to lead in three cheers for cold water, scattered a number of cigars which had been given him among the little ones. This was bad enough, but his discomfiture was completed by a little boy creeping up on the platform and handing him one of the cigars which he had picked up.

Alderman Tucker, Boston, says you may state that I have paid for medicine and treatment in 20 years $3,000, without receiving permanent benefit. Entirely cured of his disease, saltrheum, by Cuticura Remedies.

H. E. Carpenter, Esq., Henderson, N. Y., cured of Psoriasis or Leprosy, of twenty years' standing, by the Cuticura Resolvent internally, and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap externally.—The most wonderful case on record.

A beautiful answer was given by a little Scotch girl: When her class was examined she replied to the question, "What is patience?" "Wait a wee, and dinna weary."

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color, beauty and lustre.

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.
IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.
IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The catalogue states exactly what the papers are: When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST.—When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 932 newspapers of which 187 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. THE poor as well as the rich, the old as well as the young, the wife as well as the husband, the young maiden as well as the young man, the girl as well as the boy, may just as well earn a few dollars in honest employment, as to sit around the house and wait for others to earn it for them. If you do not care for employment, we can impart valuable information to you free of cost. THE HERALD FOR 1882.

Again we greet the patrons of the Tecumseh Herald with a friendly welcome, and present to them our plans for the coming year. The Herald has become so well established in the territory where its circulation extends, and its character has become so well known, that an extended notice of our future aims and prospects seems unnecessary. Still our friends have a right to know what we purpose to do during the next twelve months, whether any important changes are on the tapis, what kind of a newspaper we design giving them, and upon what basis we wish to conduct the business department of the office.—The program which we have adopted for the guidance of the Herald during the ensuing year may be more fully explained under two heads:—First, its editorial management; secondly, its business management.

In the editorial conduct of the paper the same general rules will guide us that have obtained in the office since the present proprietors took the helm. Our chief aim will be to make the Herald a first-class Local Newspaper. We shall not attempt to compete with the New York and Chicago weeklies in the amount of general news and miscellaneous reading furnished, for our efforts in that direction would prove a failure, but in the field of local news, adapted to the wants and wishes of the residents of Northern Lenawee, we can and will compete with any other newspaper in existence. Increased attention will be given to county and state news.—Our corps of township correspondents will be enlarged and improved; in fact, the fruits of our policy in this direction are already apparent.—Special pains will be taken to give full reports of all public meetings of a general character held in Tecumseh or vicinity. The farmers will be remembered in the proceedings of Farmers' Clubs, and when the rush of holiday advertising is over a special page will be devoted to their interests. At the same time we shall not neglect the women and children, for a few columns of choice miscellany will be given each week for their instruction and edification. We shall also pay considerable attention to current matters of political interest, such as civil-service reform, the discussion of the tariff, etc. Our business is better systematized than ever before, and the better portions of one man's time will be regularly given hereafter to the editorial department of the office.

In our business management we shall make one or two important changes. In lieu of the premiums given in the former years, we shall expend the money heretofore used for that purpose on the newspaper itself, and thus furnish our patrons a better newspaper for the same yearly subscription. We have a few of last year's receipt books still on hand. These will be given to all advance paying subscribers for 1882 until the supply shall have been exhausted. We have also resolved to adopt the advance payment plan and rigidly adhere to it. There is no good reason why a man should not pay in advance for his copy of the Clinton News or Tecumseh Herald or Adrian Times, exactly as he does for his New York World, or Detroit Tribune or Michigan Farmer. Country editors, no less than those living in the city, must buy bread and butter and fuel, pay rent, purchase stock and hire workmen. These things cannot be accomplished without hard cash or currency with which to foot the bills. The old slip-shod pay-as-you-please method works mischief both to publisher and subscriber. The publisher is deprived of funds which are legally and morally his due, and is thus forced to let his own debts run; to the wear and tear of his conscience and the detriment of his credit. The subscriber becomes heedless and careless about paying his bills and contracts bad business habits which may forever cripple his usefulness. This plan too compels prompt subscribers to carry the dilatory ones, and thus indirectly it places a premium upon negligence. We shall allow our friends a lee-way of one month in which to adapt themselves to the new regulation, but all subscriptions not credited in advance on or before the first of February next will be discontinued. We trust that the Herald's numerous family may be still further increased during 1882, and that the members thereof may all enjoy a happy and prosperous year.

BEWARE OF OZONE.

After printing the inside of our paper this week we found the following note in the Michigan Farmer which shows that the Ozone scheme is a humbug. The card was received from a responsible advertising agency, E. N. Freshman & Co, with whom we have done business for the past five years, and we had every reason to believe it to be an honest bona fide article. Hundreds of newspapers all over the country have been imposed upon by the same ozone card.

About ten days ago, having some intimation that the preparation sent out by the Prentiss Preserving Company, of Cincinnati, was regarded with suspicion, we wrote the agency through which the advertisement was sent to us the following note:

Detroit, Dec. 16, 1881.

Messrs. E. N. Freshman & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—We notice that the Ozone Company are being denounced as frauds. Are they so? As the business came through your house you of course know the parties, and we rely upon your letting us know if they are not reputable business men. Of course we want nothing to do with frauds, and have generally relied upon agencies not to send us advertising of that kind. An early answer will oblige

Respectfully yours,
Johnstone & Gibbons.

In reply to this we received a postal card saying that the letter had been referred to this company to answer, and on Friday last we received a note from the Prentiss Preserving Company, in which they said that "the parties denouncing them knew nothing of them or their process; that their material could not be analyzed, and that if any paper would send a representative to Cincinnati he would be allowed to examine their samples, and have the process of manufacture fully explained." This sounded fair; but a day or two before its reception we learned that Professor A. B. Prescott, of the Ann Arbor University, had analyzed the compound and declared it not ozone at all, but a little powdered charcoal and sulphur, with a little cinnamon in it to give it a pleasant odor while burning. The directions for use are to burn it in the vessel or barrel in which the articles to be preserved are to be put. The Professor says it is not a preservative, and the packages are not worth five cents. The Professor deserves the thanks of the community for his expose of this swindle, which has imposed upon hundreds of shrewd business men all over the country.

Miscellaneous Business.

The Educational News says:

We hear a good deal of complaint among teachers who reside in the outer towns of the county, about being compelled to go to the county seat for examination, a distance of 15 to 25 miles, subjecting them to a hard day's travel and from $2 to $3 expenses.—The new system surely has some inconvenient features about it which should be modified by the next legislature.

This complaint has been very general in this part of the county. Another feature of the new plan has been severely criticised here. The law provides that a certain number of special examinations may be held in places away from the county seat. Four such specials have been appointed, all in March and April, 1882, at a date when most of the teachers in the county will have already obtained their certificates. Why these specials should not have been fixed at Hudson, Morenci, Blissfield and Tecumseh in September and October of this year instead of holding five examinations in Adrian this fall, and none at any other town in the county, is a very great mystery to the unsophisticated country school ma'am who is compelled to travel twenty miles or more at an expense of $3.00 to obtain a certificate.

Merry Christmas to all.

THE PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

Amusements.

From the remotest ages to the present time we find that all nations, both cultured and uncivilized, have bestowed upon this subject an attention and devotion which has in many instances approached enthusiasm. They have always recognized the necessity of the mind's having sufficient rest and diversion from its everyday pursuits by some amusement, and therefore have they endeavored to establish such games as would be not only participated in with delight but also awaited with real avidity. People generally are prone to search for something that is pleasant, and it was the realization of this fact that led Tarquinius Priscus, in the early ages of Rome, to institute the games of the circus, thereby ingratiating himself in the favor of the citizens at large. And here we may say that it is invariably the case that the more we please those with whom we are associated, the firmer will they become our friends, and hold us higher in their esteem.

These games inaugurated by Tarquinius were continued to be celebrated after him, and observed with much more grandeur. Later, their growth warranted the building of the monstrous amphitheatre, the only relic left to show the grandeur of ancient Rome, with the exception of the stupendous sewers which were constructed also by the order of the same Tarquinius. But the grand amphitheatre was defiled, and the purpose for which it was built abused; for during the persecution of the Christians, the Roman emperors caused many of the faithful to be thrown into the arena, to be torn in pieces by wild beasts, for the entertainment of the populace. Here the amusement ceased to edify; the public taste became vitiated, and the desire increased with a base tendency, in proportion to the horrifying scenes, with which is was fed. Amusements should always tend to elevate; and to arrange them so as to effect this result can truly be called an art. No amusement is commendable which does not strengthen the body or ennoble the mind. For this reason only should they be encouraged. Considerable attention is now bestowed upon theatrical performances to make them as pure and elevating as possible, and the manner in which they are brought out at the present day may be called truly artistical. One can now, if he chooses, visit a theatre and feel not only that he has learned a lesson in morality, but also feel its beneficial effects upon himself. And so with a great many other amusements, that can be carried on so as to benefit the physical condition of the body and also to lead the mind on to elevation.

Among other amusements we find one that has caused such tremendous enthusiasm among our people, that I cannot help but make note of it—this is pedestrianism—although I cannot vouch for its orthodoxy among those I have called commendable amusements. Surely it does not fulfil the first requirement, viz., the strengthening of the body, for such frequent over-exertions which the walkers are obliged to endure, would rather, in my opinion, tend to weaken it, and as to the ennoblement of the mind, I cannot see where it comes in; on the contrary, it seems to me that it lowers him to the very nature of a beast, and I cannot believe that the primary object of man was to run races and leave horses, the rightful participants, if indeed they were created for such a purpose, to be the spectators, as it were. And so there are many others of which we could speak separately, which should be avoided, for the same reason too, that they are of no benefit to ourselves nor to anyone else, and are therefore, to say the least, an entire loss of our precious time. Besides this, amusements should never be allowed to become to one a passion, so much so that the mind is constantly enveloped in thoughts of it to the entire loss of any serious thought and the time that should be occupied in study.

I would not banish amusements at all, but let them be of a truly benefitting nature, engaged in at the proper time and without that injurious excess which renders a benefit, by its abuse, an injury.

The Parable of the Prodigal Son.

Never certainly in human language was so much—such a world of love and wisdom and tenderness—compressed into such few immortal words. Every line, every touch of the picture is full of beautiful and eternal significance. The poor boy's presumptuous claim for all that life could give him—the leaving of the old home—the journey to a far country—the brief spasm of 'enjoyment' there—the mighty famine in that land—the premature exhaustion of all that could make life noble and endurable—the abysmal degradation and unutterable misery that followed—the coming of himself and recollection of all that he had left behind—the return in heart-broken penitence and deep humility—the father's far-off sight of him, and the gush of compassion and tenderness over this poor returning prodigal—the ringing joy of the whole household over him who had been loved and lost, and had now come home—the unjust jealousy and mean complaint of the elder brother, and then that close of the parable in a strain of music—'Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad; for this my brother was dead, he is alive again; he was lost, and is found'—all this indeed is a divine epitome of the wandering of man and the love of God such as no ear of man has ever heard elsewhere. Put in the one scale all that Confucius, or Sakya Mouni, or Zoroaster, or Socrates ever wrote or said—and they wrote and they said many beautiful and holy words—and put in the other the Parable of the Prodigal Son alone with all that this single parable means, and can any candid spirit doubt which scale would not weigh the other in eternal preciousness, in divine adaption to the wants of man?

The Human Figure.

The proportions of the human figure are six times the length of the feet. Whether the form is slender or plump, the rule holds good; any deviation from it is a departure from the highest beauty in proportion. The Greeks made all their statues according to this rule. The face, from the highest point of the forehead, where the hair begins, to the chin, is one-tenth of the whole stature. The hand, from the wrist to the middle finger, is the same. From the top of the chest to the highest point of the forehead, is a seventh. If the face, from the roots of the hair to the chin, be divided into three equal parts, the first division determines the place where the eyebrows meet, and the second the nostrils. The height, from the top of the head, is the distance from the extremity of the fingers when the arms are extended.

The Slangy Girl Not a Lady.

Mothers of the old school look regretfully upon the questionable manners of the rising generation, for the sang froid of the girl of the period stands out in unpleasant contrast with the modest suavity of our grandmothers. Notwithstanding the painstaking attention given to deportment in the public and private schools, the girl of gentle manners, unmarred by ill-breeding and rudeness, is the exception, and these faults are even more prevalent among the high born than the lowly. At school the girl who has the largest stock of slang, can laugh the loudest, and has least respect for either rules or propriety, is the most popular, and is courted as the boon companion and the jolly spirit. Most girls like to be favorites; the slangy schoolmate is imitated, and a pert, uncouth style is thus developed to mar through life a beautiful picture. Finishing schools and intercourse with refined people will, in a measure, tone down the coarseness, but it will be exhibited sometimes, and upon occasions produce the greatest chagrin.

Foreigners claim that what they term the self-reliance and impudence of American girls come from the wide liberty given them as to appearing in public. Native gentleness and modesty are worn off by a constant contact with the rough edges of humanity. American girls abroad have certainly been severely criticised for bad manners, and not altogether unjustly; but the overbearing snobbishness exhibited toward us in return, as if we were a race of Indians, partly palliates the offense. It is better for us, in our cultivation of politeness, to study the manners and customs of our own country than to ape foreign airs, and cater to foreign tastes. American girls would place themselves above all criticism, if they would but study dignity of bearing, and mild, ladylike, gentle ways. Music and the fine arts are elevating, but French spoken with the shrill, harsh voice of an apple-vender, and a request for music answered with slang, force the hearer to the belief that the accomplishments have been cultivated to the neglect of good breeding.

Another main constituent of the make up of a real gentlewoman is an even temper. Tempers come by nature; but they can be controlled like a fine piano. It requires work, but it can be done by careful, judicious, self-training. Some one says that "a hot temper makes greater havoc in a household than a kerosene explosion." But a sweet, well-governed temper, and the ability to overlook mishaps without a storm of words, is like a delightful perfume, refreshing and pervading the whole house.

What better time to try the experiment of wearing the graces of a gentle womanhood? Drop slang, study refinement and polite bearing; and above all, set a close watch on your temper. At the end of the year you will be amazed at the compliments you receive for being a gentlewoman, and at the good influence you have exerted upon others.

What Makes the Difference.

A writer in discoursing upon the way wealth is accumulated, says that as a general rule it is the result of economy, industry and attention to business. Poverty, on the contrary, comes from idleness, extravagance and inattention to business. Of course there are numerous exceptions to these general rules, but the facts justify the writer in the following sketch:

Here are six shoemakers working in one shop. One of them attends to his business; you can hear the music of his hammer late and early. He is in love, it may be, with some girl on the next street. He has made up his mind to be a man, to succeed, to make somebody else happy, to have a home; and while he is working, in his imagination, he can see his own fireside, with the light falling upon the faces of wife and child.

The other five gentlemen work as little as they can, spend Sunday in dissipation, have the headache Monday, and as a result, never advance. The industrious one, the one in love, gains the confidence of his employer, and in a little while cuts out work for these other fellows.

The next thing you know, he has a shop of his own, the next store, because the man of reputation, the man of known integrity, can buy all he wishes in the United States upon credit.

The next thing you know, he is married, and he has built him a house, and he is happy, and his dream has been realized.

After a while, the same five shoemakers, having pursued the old course, stand on the corner some Sunday when he rides by. He has got a carriage, his wife sits by his side, her face covered with smiles, and they have got two children, their faces beaming with joy, and the blue ribbons are fluttering in the wind.

And thereupon these five shoemakers adjourn to some neighboring saloon and pass a resolution that there is an irrepressible conflict between capital and labor.

The Pigeons of Venice.

Everybody has heard of the pigeons which flock daily to the famous Square of St. Mark's, in Venice, to be fed, and many Americans have no doubt seen them resting upon the shoulders and arms of the woman who dispenses their daily bread to them. Many are the stories told of their origin; how their ancestors served the republic by bringing back news of its fleets, and so on; but none of them are established, except that the birds have always been regarded as town property, and have been fed out of a fund set apart for that purpose, which is now said to be a donation from the Countess Poficrasto. Until lately it would have been thought little less than sacrilage to touch a feather of them; but recently a Venetian boy was discovered carrying off a pigeon, evidently with a view to pie. The case was carried into court, where it was decided that the pigeons had never been legally conveyed to the town, consequently they were nobody's property, but, so to speak, wild fowl, and that the boy was only following his natural instincts in catching them, and must be acquitted.

The total national debts of the world in 1878 were $25,531,138,212, of which that of France was the largest ($4,677,743,400); that of England next ($3,888,907,970); that of Russia third ($2,500,000,000); that of Spain fourth ($2,050,000,000); that of the United States fifth (2,035,786,831); that of Italy sixth ($1,950,000,000); that of Austria seventh ($1,500,000,000); that of British India eighth ($1,170,000,000.) The public debts have increased about $6,000,000,000 from 1870 to 1878.

MY FIRST CIGAR.

[We also give "My First Cigar," from the Keokuk Gem City.]

'Twas in a quiet alley,
One glorious summer day,
I sat upon a dry-goods box,
And drew and puffed away;
And as the curly smoke arose
And floated on the air,
I suddenly grew awful sick—
It was my first cigar.

I leaned across the dry-goods box,
Turned almost deathly pale,
And gasped and threw up everything,
E'en to my great toe nail;
Ah! what did I at such a time,
For smoking seem to care,
Alas! the trembling tear proclaimed,
It was my first cigar.

I've swallowed gobs of castor oil,
And took pills by the score;
Been turned and twisted inside out
A dozen times or more;
But sickness I have never felt,
Which could with that compare,
When in that lonely alley
I smoked my first cigar.

Washington's Market Cart.

On the 20th of April Braddock left Alexandria. On the 9th of July he fell. Washington filled the mountain passes with troops, and kept off the French and Indians from the town that trembled and grew. When the French power in Virginia was broken, he married, and "society" was chagrinned at its early experiences of his married life. Parson Weems tells us that "Alexandria, though small, was lovely, but had no charms for the palate. By tobacco its neighbors had made money. They then began to look down on the poorer sort, and to talk about families. Of course such great people could not run market carts. Hence the Belhavenites often sat down to a dinner of salt meat and johnny-cake. But when Washington brought the wealthy widow Custis to Mount Vernon, a market cart was constructed, and twice a week sent to Belhaven with fat things that amazed the lean market. Country gentlemen dining in town wondered at the change of fare, and thus it was discovered, to the mortification of some of the little great ones, that "Colonel Washington ran a market cart." "Society" then, if proud, was often plain; for Washington writes in his diary of a ball in Alexandria in 1760, where pocket-handkerchiefs served as tablecloths, that bread and butter with tea, "which the drinkers could not distinguish from hot water sweetened," made the bill of fare, and in his disgust he writes it down "a bread-and-butter-ball."

A Wife's Frugality.

The wife of the man next door has a fertile brain which is kept actively employed in a variety of directions. Among her household goods are a dozen plants in pots, and a variety of these are in a box mounted on a pedestal. The box she got at the store; the pedestal she and the boy together made. After it was done she wanted it painted.

She might have sent it to the painter for that purpose, but he would charge more than it was worth. To save the extra cost, she determined to do the work herself. She could get a pound of paint all mixed in a pot, with a brush, for twenty cents—the pot and brush to be returned after the work was done. It was a simple thing to paint, and she could put it on as easily and nicely as a trained hand could do it. The man next door didn't think much about it. It was not in his line, but he got the paint.

It was a great surprise to the wife of the man next door to see how little of the paint was required to color the box and pedestal, and how much was left after the work was done. What should she do with it? Not return it, of course, for she would not be allowed anything for it. Now that she had it she might as well use it. There was undoubtedly something it could be used on.

She looked around for the object in question, and was not long in finding it. There are more or less dingy, battered articles about a house which a coat of paint will improve. Her house was no exception. Her eyes lighted on a box holding her scouring sand. In a few moments it was a delightful green.

Then she looked around for other fields to conquer, and presently she found them, and continued to find them as long as the presence of paint made it necessary to search for them. She was nearly the whole afternoon using up that pot of paint, but it was time well employed.

And it was amazing, as she admitted to herself, how far twenty cents' worth of paint would go judiciously applied. She knew her husband would be surprised when he came home at night at all she had done.

And he was.

When he observed the green clock-case, and looked at the green paper-rack, and found that he had a green writing desk, and contemplated the green foot-stool, and saw the green coal scuttle, and got against the green clothes-horse, he was too full to say a word.

Then he picked up his green boot-jack, and when he did that he gave a wild scared look about the room, sank down in a chair and found his voice.

He said "Holy fish hooks!"

Keep the Children Grow Erect.

William Blaikie, the author of "How to Get Strong and How to Stay So," spoke before the Brooklyn Teachers' Association recently on "Physical Education." "I want," said he, "to see if in an informal talk we can't hit upon some way in which we can bring the physical education of school children down to a practical basis. Our children, who are healthy and buxom when they begin school-work, come out pale, sickly and with round shoulders. If you require the children under you to sit far back on a chair and to hold their chins up, you will cure them of being round-shouldered, and the lungs and other vital organs will have free and healthy play. Another simple plan is to have the children bend over backward until they can see the ceiling. This exercise for a few minutes each day will work a wonderful transformation. If a well-qualified teacher could be employed to superintend the physical development of the children, the best results would be seen."

An exchange inquires: "What shall we do at table?" Why, eat, man, eat, of course. It wouldn't be just the thing to play ball, or shoot at a mark, or do anything of that kind, and we don't see much left to do but to eat. Suppose you try eating, anyway, at first.

About Parrots.

A noticeable fact in relation to the peculiar food giving a flavor to the flesh of animals, such as muddy weeds to fish, fish to wild ducks, acorns to the flesh of pork, and many other instances, is most remarkable in the case of parrots. We are assured by those who live in South Africa, and frequently eat of parrots, that the delicacy of the flesh varies from a luxury to positive rejection during certain seasons of the year. When the delicious guava is ripe they are sapid and fat; the seed of the acajou imparts a slight and not disagreeable soupcon of garlic; spicy seeds give not only the flavor but an aroma of cinnamon, cloves, etc., and all berries give a peculiar quality to their flesh. They are, moreover, wine bibbers. We had a parrot which had contracted that habit at the passengers' dinner-tables on board one of the Peninsular and Oriental steamers. He would watch the guests retire, and go around "heel-tap" every dish as dry as any servant. The seed of the cotton tree is the parrot's especial weakness, and will intoxicate it in the same manner as alcohol does man. Dealers are said to give parrots a like stimulant previous to showing them to a customer, as it has the effect of making them loquacious. In opposition to a contrary notion, parrots will and often have been known to breed in captivity in different parts of Europe. They lay three or four white eggs each time, and incubate several times a year, sitting from twenty to twenty-five days, according to the season. The most successful results appear to have been attendant upon cases in which birds have been provided with nesting places suitable to their habits. In one case a small barrel was procured and pierced toward a third of its height with a hole about six inches in diameter. In the bottom was placed a quantity of saw dust three inches in thickness. On this the female laid her eggs and sat until they were hatched. Recent works question the fact that parrots breed in domestication, but there exists too many trustworthy evidences to the contrary to allow the denial to remain. Indeed, so long ago as 1833 a writer upon the subject said: "All experiments which have been tried at Caen, and Paris on this interesting subject have been attended with the most favorable results."

Trying to Find a Man in the West.

Jesse Lovely, while out west, was in search of a man whom he wished to see on a matter of business. After riding for half a day, and losing the way in that sparsely-settled country, he drew up his steed in front of a log cabin. A female came to the door. "Will you be kind enough to tell me, miss, where Mr. William Humphrey lives?" said Jesse. "I don't know," very blandly replied the young lady, "but Squire Roberts, who lives about half a mile from here, can tell you. He is a very smart man." Jesse rode on in the direction the fair enchantress indicated. Coming to the house he cried out, "Hello!" The squire with his shirt collar open, his spectacles on top of his head, and his pantaloons in his boots, made his appearance at the door. "Is this Squire Roberts?" inquired Jesse. "I am he," said the squire, with an air of importance that would have been more becoming a king. "Squire Roberts," said Jesse, "can you tell me where William Humphrey lives?" "I kin," said the squire in a self-congratulatory manner that indicated that he was able to answer the question, and proceeded: "If he are whar I anticipate he are, he are forty miles distant on Peter Creek. Although his residence are exclusively adjacent to mine, I know nothing of his wharfores or whichabouts." Jesse waved his hand in polite salutation to the squire, and rode on to find his man as best he could with the information he had received from the squire, to whom the blushing maid had directed him as the savant of the section.

Chalk and Water in Milk.

ANOTHER BELIEF SWEPT AWAY.

The daily city papers often call attention to the quality of the milk furnished to city customers. There is abundant reason for doing this, and they not too frequently insist that milk must be furnished just as it comes from the cow. But these articles lose much of their force by implying, indeed some of them directly asserting, that a mixture of chalk and water is served in place of milk. This is absurd; the most skilled manipulator can make no mixture of any form of chalk that will not be more dense than ordinary milk, from which the chalk will not completely settle, upon standing for a few hours. We doubt if there was ever a pint of milk sold in New York city in which chalk was used as an adulteration. In London, milk and other adulterations were carried to such an extent that Parliament had the matter investigated some years ago. Dr. Hassell, who was officially connected with these examinations, and has probably examined more samples of milk than any other person, says of chalk and starch in milk, while he admits that they may be very rarely used, that "it has not happened to ourselves to meet these substances in milk." Wanklyn, also of London, in the most recent work in the "Analysis of Milk," says nothing about the occurrence of chalk. The fact is, the most serious adulteration of milk is with water. Besides the addition of water, milk is impoverished by the abstraction of cream. These two, the taking off of cream and putting in water, are the worst that happen to city milk, and these are bad enough. It diverts attention from these real troubles, to talk about improbable, if not impossible, "chalk and water."—Amer. Agriculturist.

Observe the Birthdays.

Keep the birthdays religiously. They belong exclusively to, and are treasured among, the memories of home. Do not let anything prevent some token, be it ever so slight, to show that it is remembered. Birthdays are always great events to children. For one day they feel that they are heroes. The special pudding is made expressly for them; a new jacket or trowsers with pockets, or the first pair of boots, are donned; and big brothers and sisters sink into insignificance beside "little Charlie," who is "six to-day," and is soon "going to be a man." Fathers who have half a dozen little ones to care for are apt to neglect birthdays, they come so often sometimes when they are busy and sometimes when they are "nervous," but if they only knew how much such souvenirs are cherished by the children years after, they would never permit any cause to step between them and a parent's privilege.

Wonders of the Ocean.

THE SARGASSO SEA.

There is a sea in the middle of the ocean! Astonishing as the statement sounds, it is literally true. The limits of the sea are as well defined as those of any other known collection of water; its characteristics are so special that no one can mistake them.

When Columbus, on his first voyage, had got some distance to the westward of the Canary Islands, he was amazed one morning to find his ships in an undulating meadow. As far as he could see, the water was covered with a greenish-yellow plant, which appropriated the surface of the sea as thoroughly and effectually as water-lilies cover a pond. The wind was light but steady; there were not any birds to indicate the proximity of land, neither was there any apparent cause for such a collection of weed. The sailors, already scared by the persistence of the wind from one quarter—they had got into the trade-winds—looked upon the weed before them, behind them, and on either side of them, as infallible proof of their imminent destruction. The Almighty, they said, was angry at their impious attempts to pry into His secrets in the west, and had given them over to the devil, who was causing a wind to blow that would forever prevent their return to Spain, and now had brought them into a snare such as sailors most dread—shallows extending too far beyond the land to allow of ships or men being saved. The commander could not explain the sight he saw, and might have thought with his men that the weed was the cast-off clothing of some dangerous rocks which lay a short distance down, ready to tear and rend them. The deep sea lead-line was hove, but no bottom was found. The ships kept on their westerly course, still sounding and still getting no bottom, till, in a few days they drew clear of weed and came where the broad ocean was all around them again, unencumbered by aught but the ships of the explorers.

Ever since the day Columbus saw the weed, and probably for thousands of years before he saw it, the Sargasso Sea—such is the name of the weedy sea—has existed. Its boundaries may be indicated by tracing a triangle, of which the three corners are represented by the Azores, the Canaries, and Cape de Verde. Within those limits the sea is still bottomless, and is clothed on its surface with a garment of vegetable material, so thick as to retard the progress of vessels sailing through it. Steamers avoid it when they can do so, because of the fouling of their screws and paddles by the weed; but sailing-vessels outward bound to the West Indies, South America, the Cape, etc., must needs pass through it. Sometimes a great storm, proceeding from some point outside the charmed triangle, causes its effects to be felt within the triangle, and scatters the weed more or less out of bounds. But usually there is a placid condition of things in the Sargasso Sea; the wind is light, the sky is clear, the water never rages, and, unless such a storm as has been mentioned should disturb the wonted calmness of the sea, the surface, over several degress of latitude and longitude, is covered, as in the day when Columbus saw it, with the weed Sargassum, which springs from an apparently inexhaustible source.

Women's Faces.

Intellectual graces do certainly add to the chances of a face being beautiful; and, without intellectual graces, the most charming face can never be quite satisfactory. Emotional variety and expression, however, is the true key to the inexplicable influence of the most irregular faces—a key which suggests considerations as to the origin of this free emotional display which cannot be entered upon here. The possibilities of tragedy which lie in some women's eyes are sufficient to make the face strongly and strangely suggestive—you know that with the slightest application of the proper touch, the mind of concealed emotion would fly up. Even the suggestion of the study of a fierce temper (as a brief artistic study, be it understood) is better than the helpless dullness of the faultless and inexpressive face. Not unfrequently this indication of a fiery temperament lies in the eyes of a face which is otherwise unutterably soft and dove-like. In such a case the piquante contradiction is irrisistably charming if the woman be tender, and fragile, and winning, with a discreet and delicious veil of mildness tempering the powerful eyes. Such a woman invariably lends herself to any passing mood with an abandon which is either wonderfully seductive and confiding or rebellant and terrible. She is either affectionate with a sort of kitten-like, tantalizing playfulness, or she is a revengeful Juno with eyes of anger and words of sharp fire. There are other faces which express powerful emotion under powerful restraint with all its suggestions of strong, enduring constancy and irreproachable delicacy of conscience. There are others that only speak of emotional weakness—of a certain infantile want of principle, joined to a want of will, and a prevailing misapprehension of surrounding relations chiefly arising out of vanity.

CURIOUS STATISTICS OF MARRIAGE.—It is found that young men from 15 to 20 years of age marry young women averaging two or three years older than themselves; but, if they delay marriage until they are 20 or 25 years old, their spouse averages a year younger than themselves; and henceforward this difference steadily increases, till in extreme old age, on the bridegroom's part, it is apt to be enormous. The inclination of octogenarians to wed misses in their teens is an every-day occurence, but it is amusing to find, in the love-matches of boys, that the statistics bear out the satires of Thackeray and Balzac.

—The shrinkage of Tulare Lake, Cal., uncovered a prehistoric settlement, stone buildings, traces of canals, once bordered with planted trees, and other evidences of occupation by an unknown race, being clearly defined as the water subsided.

How Long Silk will Last.

Last week our village sexton, John McConnell, had occasion to remove the remains of a person who had been buried twelve years. The coffin was found in such a decomposed state that it crumbled into small pieces; the flesh had entirely disappeared from the corpse, and the clothing upon it had wasted into nothingness. The bones of the body were so softened that they dropped apart on being moved. But a heavy black silk neck handkerchief around the neck of the body was found in a perfect state of preservation. The silk was not even faded and the texture of the cloth seemed to be as strong as on the day it was placed in the ground. The cravat was kept by the friends of the deceased as a memento. This is a striking illustration of the peculiar preservative qualities of silk.

THE regular edition of St. Nicholas in England is now eight thousand copies. Ten thousand copies of the Christmas number are being sold there.

THE opening party of the new Springville Hotel will be held tomorrow evening, Dec. 23d. Good music will be provided and a fine party is anticipated.

LAST Monday W. Comfort bought wheat of parties from Dundee, Bridgewater, Blissfield, Cambridge and Rollin, in addition to what was purchased from farmers near home.

THE W. C. T. U., of Macon, will give a social at the residence of Mrs. Mary A. Collins Wednesday evening, Dec. 28. Refreshments will be served. Tickets 10 cts. All are invited.

SAMUEL COLE arrived in town on Monday last all the way from Denver, Col. He expects to remain here a month or so before his return. The climate and the business advantages of Denver both seem to agree with him.

LAST week Mr. C. H. Adam sent down to Tom and George Adamson a pickerel which weighed 20 pounds and measured 3 ft. 6 inches. It was served at Sink's hotel, and this notice should have appeared last week, but in the hurry of holiday work was overlooked.

HENRY LANCASTER, having finished his mammoth barn and got things in apple-pie order, will give a grand New Year's ball at Evans Lake on Friday evening, Dec. 30. Music by Purchase & Cole's band. Roast chicken and oysters till you can't rest. Go to Hank's.

THE Farmers' Review, of Chicago, has attained a phenominal success within the brief period of its existence and it is now the best agricultural papers, by all odds, published in Chicago. After the first of January next the price will be raised to $1.50. Subscribe now and get it for $1,00.

THE Western Farmers almanac for 1882, published by John P. Morton & Co., of Louisville, Ky. is upon our table. Besides the usual matter which all almanacs contain, it has a new system of weather forecasts, which is claimed to be the most complete of anything heretofore published.

THE third lecture of the Tecumseh Lecture Course will be given on the 4th of January, by Geo. W. Bain, of Kentucky. Among the temperance lecturers who have grown into prominence, within the past four years, Mr. Bain is said to eclipse them all. He is a very powerful and eloquent speaker.

RICHARD FORD began work in 1840, when but seventeen years old, in T. Cummins' carriage shop, and he has worked continuously in the same shop on the same corner and in the same corner of the shop for 41 years. Chas. Cummins having now gone out of business, Mr. Ford has gone to work for John Hialey.

SETH BULLOCK, ESQ, of Deadwood, Dakota, son-in-law of J. C. Eccles, paid Tecumseh a brief visit last week. Mr. Bullock was formerly sheriff of Deadwood, but he is now conducting a large hardware business in that flourishing western city. Business engagements at home prevented his making a longer stay.

W. J. SMITH, who lives in the west part of the township went to the barn last Monday morning and found that one of his horses had a broken leg.—No cause could be seen for the accident. The horse had to be killed to relieve its suffering. Mr. Smith lost his only cow this summer and the loss of a horse now is a serious blow to him.

THE first lecture of the temperance course was delivered by Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine, last Thursday evening. Mr. Dow is older than we supposed, being nearly 80 years of age, but he has all the vim of a man thirty years younger. His lecture was well received by a large audience. Ann Eliza Young gives her talk on Mormonism this evening.

DANIEL KELLY, who lives about five miles north-east of this village, in the town of Clinton, committed suicide on Friday of last week by hanging himself in a barn. He first attempted to cut his throat with a butcher knife but failed. Mr. Kelly was 78 years old, and has been subject to spells of melancholy, and it is supposed that in one of these fits he formed the determination to take his own life.

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

THIS soft spell is rather a damper on the holiday trade.

WE have lately received a lot of new border and type ornaments from which elegant designs can be made for New Year's Calling Cards. Leave your orders for cards early and avoid the rush.

JOHN R. CLARK will deliver his new temperance lecture in School District No. 5, known as the Colvin district, Raisin, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 28th, at 7 o'clock. Turn out and hear him.

L. C. DAVENPORT'S New Year's party will come off at the Lake Ridge Hotel, on Monday evening, Jan. 2d. Invite your girl early for there will be a crowd, and if you delay she may be picked up by some other man.

J. B. COLBILL, of Philadelphia, who has been stopping with James Glasgow and other relatives for the past four months to improve his health, will return to his home the last of the week. He is much pleased with his Michigan visit.

CAPT. J. C. BONTECOU, of Jackson, general agent of the State Temperance Alliance, will speak to our citizens upon temperance at the opera house on Tuesday evening, Dec. 27, at which time he will organize a branch Alliance. The county alliance will also hold a county convention at the same hall on the 28th of Dec. Let all friends of temperance be there.

ON Sunday evening next at the Universalist church, Rev. Mr. Shepard will preach a christmas discourse. Topic, "The true christmas significations, the ideal destiny of man; from Rom. 14th-9th. For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived that he might be the Lord both of the dead and the living." The church will be appropriately trimmed for christmas eve.

Dundee Ledger: Milan has a curiosity in the shape of a boy ten years old who has shed his third set of teeth and is now on his fourth edition. A gentleman of our town ran across him the other day and examined his mouth and found his teeth all gone but his gums were swelling and teeth just putting through. He was told that this would make four sets of teeth he had had since his infancy.

THE leading article in the North American Review for January contains the judgments of five of the most distinguished American authorities upon "The Moral Responsibility of the Insane." The announcement is made that the February number of the Review, to be issued Jan. 15th, will contain Part III. of the "Christian Religion" series of articles, and that it is to be a very able defense of the Christian faith.

GRANDMA Satterthwaite, who broke her arm by a fall a few days ago, is rapidly recovering, and has experienced but little inconvenience from the accident. She lives with Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Sutton, on the old homestead, where her husband "Uncle Samuel" Satterthwaite lived so many years. Mrs. Satterthwaite is now 93 years old, and is remarkably well preserved for so aged a woman.

Christmas at the Churches.

At the Baptist church there will be a special service on Sunday evening next, in which the Sabbath school will participate, of a character appropriate to the occasion.

At the M. E. church the pastor will preach a Christmas discourse Sunday evening and the Sunday school will conduct the singing.

At the Episcopal church a Christmas sermon will be given in the morning by the Rector, and a special Sunday school service in the evening.—The church will be appropriately trimmed for the occasion.

The Universalist Sunday school will present a Christmas concert exercise on Saturday evening, to be followed by a tree and a distribution of gifts to the little folks.

The Presbyterians held their Christmas doings last Tuesday evening. A festival was held at the church and donations taken for the Sunday schools of the burnt district. A large amount of supplies was brought in, which were forwarded by express yesterday to the fire sufferers.

A BETTER line of carriages has never been offered in this market than is now on exhibition at Kennedy & Co's.

The Morenci boys indulge in loud talk and throw peanuts about the doorways of the churches, whereat the Observer is very indignant.

Clinton News: Mr. Erskine has a new lady boarder. She came Wednesday morning and will board with him permanently, although we are afraid our genial landlord will find it difficult to collect her bill. In fact it would not be surprising if he had to board her for nothing and pay all her expenses for a number of years, besides. She brought no baggage with her and registered just eight pounds.

WE understand that several ladies of Tecumseh intend to receive New Year's call, this year. Monday, Jan. 2d. will probably be observed. Saturday, Dec. 31st, will be a very busy day in business circles, and as New Years falls on Sunday the succeeding day becomes the proper legal holiday. The ladies who expect to keep open houses are requested to leave their names at the HERALD Counting Room, where a full list will be kept for the inspection of interested parties.

VICKS Floral Guide.—Of the many Guides and Seed and Plant catalogues sent out by our Seedmen and Nurserymen, and that are doing so much to inform the people and beautify and enrich our country, none are so beautiful, none so instructive as Vick's Floral Guide. Its paper is the choicest, its illustrations handsome and given by the thousand, while its colored plates are gems. This work, although costing but ten cents, is handsome enough for a gift book, or a place on the parlor table. Published by James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. Chas. B. Wayman, Erie, Pa., writes: "My physicians had given me up to die. They told me my lungs and liver were all decayed and gone. I was very weak, pale and emaciated. By chance I saw Brown's Iron Bitters advertised. I immediately realized that without iron in the blood, life could not exist. With trembling anxiety I sent a servant, who procured for me a bottle. I must have taken it with great faith, for almost immediately I felt its beneficial effect. Soon all dyspeptic symptoms disappeared, my lungs grew strong, pains in the region of the heart vanished, my urine became free of sediment, and in a word I have regained perfect health. Now I feel able to thrash the doctor that attended me, and really believe I ought to do it."

THE January Century, a large edition of which is on the press, will be delayed this month until the 23d. One of its novel features is to be a frontispiece printed in tint, a portrait of Ex-President Theirs, accompanying an article by the Hon Elihu B. Washburn, our former Minister to France. A full-page portrait of Queen Margaret of Italy is given in connection with an article on the making of Burano lace, for which the Princess Louise of England has made a sketch. The number also has another portrait of President Garfield (from an artotype by Edward Bierstadt, N. Y.,) which accompanies an anecdotal paper by Colonel A. F. Rockwell, entitled, "From Mentor to Elberon."

At the left end of the board, drawn by Florence Raymond, was pictured the schoolhouse of Whittier's boyhood days. Lansing Republican; The second edition of "Michigan in the War" is now in course of preparation. Every soldier or sailor in Michigan who is entitled to a copy must make application, receive a certificate from the adjutant general's office of service; and this must be entered upon the state librarian's record, to insure the receipt of a book. This is a large job, and in order to accomplish it, and get the books off in any reasonable time, with the scant clerical force at her command, she should have these certificates as rapidly as possible. Those interested will make a note of this and act accordingly, or they may wait a long time for their books.

Exhaustive diseases that lead to insanity, consumption, and a premature grave, are quickly cured by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens every part of the body.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NORTHERN LENAWEE: I wish to state that I am still devoting, with the aid of my sons, the experience of 40 years endeavor to give GOOD GOODS for the least possible price. When you buy at less price you lose in the quality of goods more than you save in price.—When you find to a certainty the same quality of goods, you will find my prices as low or lower than others, for the reason that I pay cash for my goods, and give my customers the benefit of the discounts I get for cash. I have probably more goods in my line than all the other dealers in Adrian combined. Goods packed and sent with care on all railway routes. Our Carpet stock is complete and prices lower than Detroit and Toledo. Best extra Ingrains 35c, cheaper goods in proportion. Fine patterns, Tapestry and Body Brussels. Hanging lamps and Crockery. Rotation of Crops.

BY CHARLES T. PARSONS.

We found the old way of allowing land to remain seeded to grass five or six years, and often more, all wrong for us. Three years is long enough. Land well tilled in this way ought to yield four tons to the acre every year for three years. These remarks as to grass apply to early cut; if it is allowed to stand till it matures its seed, many benefits are lost.

Our mode of rotation applied to 20 acres of tobacco, was as follows: As soon as it was cut, we seeded down twelve or fifteen acres with about eight quarts of timothy seed to the acre. This gave us five acres of old land for tobacco, and twelve, or fifteen acres of timothy turf. When the latter was three years old, it was plowed with a double plow, in August. We manured about 30 loads to the acre for tobacco, and top-dressed the first fall on the grass one year old. By this course our crop of hay has been doubled.

Corn we rotate with rye for the sake of getting a crop of clover to plow under; also because we can raise more corn with compost, of which we have a plenty. Tobacco stalks are very valuable and should be used in rotation about five years apart. All this crop, we find, should be plowed under, if possible, when green. Potatoes leave the land in good order for any crop. Last season we tried to rotate in buckwheat, intending to plow it under. We sowed it about the 20th of July, after a fair crop of rye. The crop was so good we harvested it; it yielded about 60 bushels on three acres, and, being on our poorest land, we feel it has well earned a good top-dressing next spring. In plowing under rye for manure we have not met with very good success.

Let me here suggest that it seems Nature has many strong arguments in favor of rotation of crops. When a boy I often wondered why the pines and soft wood trees would grow and flourish so well after the hard wood forests have passed away. Science tells us that the one takes from the soil the ingredents the other does not require.

It also tells us that wheat and rye should follow a finely cultivated piece of tobacco, which requires potash and the various salts of potash and the elements of nitrogen and a very small supply of lime. Wheat is a lime crop, taking only 28 pounds of mineral matter to a growth of 28 bushels to the acre and leaving the land in good condition for grass. Indian corn treated with ashes and superphosphate of lime, followed by rye or oats or wheat, is far better. Let the roots be enriched by bone and phosphate of lime,

Money laid out in clover seed for the farmer is always a good investment. Sow it on your wheat and on your rye and oats; also on your tobacco land. Keep it growing wherever you can, as it is the best substitute for weeds we know of. If the growth is heavy, sprinkle on a little plaster while the dew is on before you plow it, and the result is always favorable. As several valuable ingredients of the crops we raise come from the air, keep the land and the plants in good condition to draw from the source.

Rotations of crops depend upon kinds of soil and the crop you wish to raise, as well as the past treatment of the land. No system of rotation can be adopted as the best for all soils, climates, markets and the home wants. Nor will the most scientific or successful rotation take the place of manure or fertilizers, but only help draw out the great possible returns. Should we not always keep in view the great fertility of our soil, and thereby oblige two blades of grass to grow where one grew before?

The Women at Home.

Our mothers, wives, and daughters: Home is not home at all without them. Yet they may die and leave the house silent and sad any day.—Husbands and fathers, a word in your ear. The ladies are not always to blame when they are low spirited and "cross." They are sick. Put a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" on the shelf and tell them to use it. The color will come back to the cheeks and the laugh to their lips. Go and get it at once down town, or mail One Dollar to the Doctor's address at Roudout, N. Y.

The Fuel of the Future.

The National Gazette makes the following announcement in regard to the use of petroleum as fuel: We shall be soon able to announce a wonderful stride in the mechanical appliances for using liquid fuel for generating steam in both marine and land boilers. The matter is in the hands of practical men, who will soon demonstrate they can make from twenty-eight to thirty gallons of crude petroleum, costing from eighty-five to ninety cents, do the work of a ton of coal, costing from four dollars to four dollars and twenty-five cents, without dirt or smoke, and when, as in the case of a large steamer carrying from forty to forty-five men in the fire-room, one man in each will be abundantly able to keep up a uniform pressure of steam at all times. Liquid fuel is the intervening step between coal and electricity, which will in due season furnish motion for the world. But until we arrive at a thorough knowledge of this subject and of motive power, liquid fuel will have had its day and generation, wiping out the last remnant of barbarism, coal. The fireman of the future can wear broadcloth in the fire-room, while the coal passer will have laid down his "shovel and hoe," to become one of the memories of the past. This condition of things is near at hand.

Catarrh.

Clear head and voice, easy breathing, sweet breath, perfect smell, taste and hearing, no cough, no distress.—These are conditions brought about in Catarrh by the use of Sanford's Radical Cure. One bottle Radical Cure, one box Catarrhal Solvent and one Inhaler, in one package, for $1.

Those who do not know the worth of money can never appreciate the misery they often cause in not paying their obligations promptly to those who are needy. One dollar promptly paid will, in a day's time cancel many an obligation, make many a heart glad, and do much good. It is not business to say, "Call again," when you have the money ready to pay a legitimate bill. Prompt pay makes better times. Misers are curses upon our land.

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

is The Great Connecting Link between the East and the West!

Its main line runs from Chicago to Council Bluffs, passing through Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline, Rock Island, Davenport, West Liberty, Iowa City, Marengo, Brooklyn, Grinnell, Des Moines (the capital of Iowa), Stuart, Atlantic, and Avoca; with branches from Bureau Junction to Peoria; Wilton Junction to Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Eldon, Belknap, Centreville, Princeton, Trenton, Gallatin, Cameron, Leavenworth, Atchison, and Kansas City; Washington to Sigourney, Oskaloosa, and Knoxville; Keokuk to Farmington, Bonaparte, Bentonsport, Independent, Eldon, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Oskaloosa, Pella, Monroe, and Des Moines; Mt. Zion to Keosauqua; Newton to Monroe; Des Moines to Indianola and Winterset; Atlantic to Griswold and Audubon; and Avoca to Harlan and Carson. This is positively the only Railroad, which owns, and operates a through line from Chicago into the State of Kansas.

Through Express Passenger Trains, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, are run each way daily between CHICAGO and PEORIA, KANSAS CITY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, LEAVENWORTH and ATCHISON. Through cars are also run between Milwaukee and Kansas City, via the "Milwaukee and Rock Island Short Line."

The "Great Rock Island" is magnificently equipped. Its road bed is simply perfect, and its track is laid with steel rails.

What will please you most will be the pleasure of enjoying your meals, while passing over the beautiful prairies of Illinois and Iowa, in one of our magnificent Dining Cars that accompany all Through Express Trains. You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

The principal R. R. connections of this great Through Line are as follows:

At CHICAGO, with all diverging lines for the East and South.

At ENGLEWOOD, with the L.S. & M.S., and P., Ft. W. & C. R. Rds.

Spoopendyke Bathes Mrs. S.

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, as he bounced out of his bathing house and thumped on the door of the one occupied by Mrs. Spoopendyke, "are you ready? We must hurry into the water and get out again, or we won't get through in time for dinner."

Mrs. Spoopendyke emerged, bent almost double and shivering with the cold.

"Isn't it rather chilly?" she asked.

"Not at all, Mrs. Spoopendyke, not at all; the air is rather cool, but the water is warm. If you are going with me you want to move along."

As they reached the beach, Mr. Spoopendyke left his wife and boldly strode into the surf. A wave broke over him, filling his eyes, nose, ears and mouth, and then he strode out.

"What are you standing there for, eh?" he demanded. "What do you take yourself for—a big lighthouse? Did ye come down here to take a bath, or are ye waiting for some ship to tie up to you? What is the matter with you anyway?"

"I'm afraid of the waves," whimpered Mrs. Spoopendyke, "they're so big."

"Oh! they're too big for you, ain't they," rerorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Wait till I get a man to saw you off a little one. Better get measured for one to suit, hadn't ye? It's the big waves you want, I tell you. Look here!" and Mr. Spoopendyke marched boldly into the sea again. Another wave caught him, and landed him high and dripping on the beach.

"Why didn't ye come when I called ye? What d'ye want to make me walk all the way up here after you for? shrieked Mr. Spoopendyke. "Are you waiting to be launched like a ship? Can't you walk as far as that? What are ye hoisting up the legs of your pants for? They ain't skirts. Now look a me. See how I go in, and you follow me when I beckon to you. Watch me now."

Mr. Spoopendyke plunged in and swashed around a few minutes in safety, but the treacherous water was biding its time. Another wave caught him and rolled him over, pumped itself into his stomach, drew him under, whirled him around, and finally deposited him, howling on the sand.

"Got most ready to go in," he jerked out, as he climbed up himself and assumed the perpendicular. "Think I'm going to slam around here all day, like a waterspout, waiting for you? What did you come here for? Find any fun standing out there like a soda-water sign? Why don't you get into the water if you are going to? Come on now."

"I'm afraid," sniveled Mrs. Spoopendyke. "If I go in I know I will be drowned."

"No, you won't get drowned, either. Can't you hold on to me? What did you put on the shirt and trousers for if you meant to get drowned? What are you doing around here? Now when I go in again, you come along, or else you go home."

Mr. Spoopendyke plunged into the surf, but as he came up he missed the rope. For a second or two he sprawled around, and then began to yell. Mrs. Spoopendyke eyed him for a moment, and then her fears for him overcame her fears for herself, and with a yell she dashed in, and hauled him out by the hair.

"Dod gast the water!" choked Mr. Spoopendyke; "I'm full of the measly tuff. So you got in didn't ye? Let go of my hair, will ye? Let go, I tell ye! What d'ye think you are anyway—a steam-barber's shop? Going to let hold of that hair sometime?"

But, frightened out of all reason, Mrs. Spoopendyke clung still, and hauled Mr. Spoopendyke to his bathing-house.

"Oh if I hadn't saved you!" she sobbed.

"Oh, yes, you saved me, didn't you?" sneered Mr. Spoopendyke. "All you want is four air-tight compartments and two sets of thole-pins to be a patent life-raft. Are you going to let go of that hair?"

And as she released him they went to their separate apartments.

Sense and Sentiment.

The world is an old woman, and mistakes any gilt farthing for a gold coin; whereby being often cheated, she will thenceforth trust nothing but the common copper.—[Carlyle.

A desire of knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind; and every human being, whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has to get knowledge.—[Johnson.

The most adroit falsehood is but thin ice, that may break any day. The true art is to know how to hold truth, and how to withhold it; but never to deal with anything else.—[Ouida.

All our friends, perhaps, desire our happiness; but it must invariably be in their own way. What a pity that they do not employ the same zeal in making us happy in our own.—[Bulwer.

Discord is an incendiary who sets fire to the house of love over one's very head; but monotony is an underminer, who saps the foundation, and when there is a fall, love is buried forever in the ruins.—[Lola Montez.

A bad king is like a bad season. The next may bring improvement; or, if this rule be wholly intolerable, he can be deposed. Under a bad constitution no such change is possible. It can be ended only by a revolution.—[Froude.

An old belle who endeavors to retain by sharp wit and spicy scandal the place she held only in virtue of youth and spirited beauty, is like an enemy firing at you from the windows of your own house.—[G. W. Curtis.

The British are, under the mask of a cold and reserved demeanor, the most impassioned of all nations; in fact, it requires but little philosophy to see that, always, where the internal heat and power is greatest, there will the outside surface be the coldest.—[De Quincey.

Man being fallen from his natural estate, there is no object so extravagant as not to be capable of attracting his desire. Ever since he lost his real good, everything cheats him with the appearance of it—even his own destruction, though contrary as this seems both to reason and nature.—[Pascal.

Anthropomorphism will never be obliterated from the minds of the unintellectual. Their god, at the best, will never be anything more than the gigantic shadow of a man—a vast phantom of humanity—like one of those Alpine spectres seen in the midst of the clouds by him who turns his back on the sun.—[Draper.

We are so made, almost all of us, that the false seeming which we have thought of with painful shrinking, when beforehand in our solitude it has urged itself on us as a necessity, will possess our muscles and move our lips as if nothing but that were easy when once we have come under the stimulus of expectant eyes and ears.—[George Eliot.

Difficulty is the nurse of greatness—a harsh nurse, who rocks her foster children into strength ond athletic proportions.

Sit Down to Work.

All women should economize their strength as much as possible while they are young and healthy, and still more if they are aged and feeble. One way to do this is to rest one set of muscles while others are in action. Begin early in the morning by sitting down to your work before becoming tired, and you will hold out better through the day.

Place a light box in a chair to make it high enough to sit at the table to work. You can iron, wash dishes, mix bread, roll out pie crust, and many other things with far less fatigue than if standing. Women cannot keep on their feet very long at a time without injury to their health. All women who have children, whether boys or girls, should teach them early to aid in the kitchen.

Boys as well as girls may be taught to pound out or rub clothes, and even to wash, rinse, and hang them up neatly. They may be taught to mop, scrub and clean ceilings, iron their own clothes, and others, if need be, clean vegetables, and do many things about the house, and it will make better men of them than if they were not taught to do these things.

A Vexed Clergyman.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and indeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing, making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial bottles given away at C. A. Wright & Co., Tecumseh.

A Pupil of Liszt.

A young female pianist, an orphan, and wholly dependent for her professional talent, arriving in a small town in Germany, advertised a concert for a certain day, giving herself out as a pupil of Liszt. The day before the concert was to come off she discovered, to her great dismay, that Liszt arrived in town and was staying at the same hotel with herself. Fearing an exposure, which would be fatal to her future career, she waited on Liszt, and in the most humble manner begged pardon for the unwarranted use she had made of his name, making him acquainted at the same time with her unfriended situation. He listened to her story, and requested her in the kindest manner to sit down to the piano and play one of the pieces she had prepared for the next day's concert. He sat down by her side, gave her advice as to how certain passages should be rendered corrected some faults, and then said: "Now, my young friend, I have given you a lesson; you may henceforth call yourself a pupil of Liszt. Before she could stammer out her thanks, he added: "If the programmes are not yet printed you may state on this occasion you will be assisted by your instructor, Abbe Liszt."

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorses Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only rollable remedy in the market. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways.

An Interesting Puzzle.

Perhaps some of our readers are not familiar with the following puzzle:

A young man asked an old man for his daughter in marriage. The answer was, "Go into the orchard and bring in a parcel of apples. Give me one-half of the whole number, and the mother one-half of the balance and half an apple over, and the daughter one-half of the remainder and half an apple over, and have one left for yourself, without cutting the apple, and then, if she is willing, you can have her." He solved the question, and how many did he bring? Fourteen, as you can easily prove. The old woman was to have one-half of the balance, which will be three and a half, and half an apple over, which would make four apples for her. There would be three apples left, of which the daughter was to have one-half and half an apple over, which would give her two, and leave the lover his one, without cutting the apple.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

How to keep pickles without brine: Pick and wash your cucumbers, put them into glass cans, put in one or two small pepper pods, fill the can with good cider vinegar, seal tight and put in a cool place, and they will always be ready for the table.

Mrs. Lucy E. McCormick, Covington, Ky., writes: "My constitution was completely shattered by rheumatism. I suffered intensely; stimulants only gave me temporary relief. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters. It has cured me completely, and I believe permanently. After using two bottles I felt better and stronger than ever I did in all my life before."

Was Abraham Lincoln a Teetotaler?

EDITOR TECUMSEH HERALD.

DEAR SIR:—This morning in looking over your issue of Nov. 17th, I find the following reference to one of America's martyr presidents: "Abraham Lincoln was no teetotaler but very temperate." This statement conflicts with another lately made by a gentleman who was an intimate personal friend of Lincoln and who must, I think, be regarded as a good authority.

The Rev. Dr. Miner, of Trenton, N. J., in a lecture delivered at a session of the Baptist conference, entitled, "Personal Reminiscences of A. Lincoln," said: "He was a thorough and consistent temperance man throughout. He would neither touch liquor himself or furnish it to others. After his nomination for the presidency, he was informed that a committee appointed by the national convention, was coming to Springfield to notify him formally of the nomination. The Illinois state committee went to him and requested that for once he should waive his temperance views and furnish liquor on the occasion. They represented that a failure to do this might make him unpopular. His answer was 'Gentlemen you are old and valued friends and neighbors and I would do anything that was right to serve you, but I cannot furnish liquor to anybody in my house, even if I lose the election by refusing to do so.'"

In the interests of truth I regard this as an important matter and shall be thankful if you will insert this, and oblige Yours Truly,

JOEL HARPER,
Burlington, Kansas.

ARTHURS'

HOME MAGAZINE.

A NEW YEAR

—WITH—

New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not, only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."

"It is so home-like and good, so pure and ennobling, always appealing to our better selves and lifting us to higher and better things."

"I have taken your Home Magazine for 20 years, and feel as if I could hardly live without it."

There will be added a department devoted exclusively to American Art, commencing with the December number, now ready; it is intended to include the freshest and most important information regarding every branch of the subject, together with concise Critical Notices of the leading Art Exhibitions and publications of this country. This department will be in charge of a leader in Art matters, and will add to the value of the MAGAZINE OF ART as an exponent of American Art.

Harper's Magazine, the most popular illustrated periodical in the world, begins its sixty-fourth volume with the December number. It represents what is best in American literature and art; and its marked success in England—where it has already a circulation larger than that of any English magazine of the same class—has brought into its service the most eminent writers and artists of Great Britain. The forthcoming volumes for 1882 will in every respect surpass their predecessors.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

BROOKLYN.

Rev. Eichbaum has returned from the west, the condition of his throat demanding that he shall locate where coal smoke does not constitute atmosphere.

The weather was unfavorable for the church fair, though the attendance was very good, and the dinner table especially well patronized. As church fairs occur in the weekly lesson they deserve more than a passing notice. Their basis is a good intention, usually that of buying a rectory, building a church or furnishing it, paying a minister or mortgage, and sometimes providing a library for the Sabbath school. Whatever the object may be, it is good and nice to contemplate, and a band of women and children may be pardoned if they are proud of adding two or three hundred dollars, yearly, to a depleted treasury by industry and perseverance, and they go to work with a will to bend aside all obstacles they cannot break to accomplish it.

Whether the work room is the President's parlor or a trash room in some old building that no one else could be hired to occupy it becomes an interesting place in no time. It is pleasant in spite of ravelings, clippings, clatter of sewing machines, and well bred tumult, arising from each one asking everybody's opinion of the width of tucks, and which end is the bottom of that lovely shoe bag, for it possesses an atmosphere of self-denial or personal sacrifice for the general good, that can stimulate every member to be first in projects for immolation.

Sewing of all kinds is contracted for at very low prices, because the labor will cost nothing, and unless they work cheaper than a regular seamstress they would not get as much to do. Each one submits to taxation of purse, to buy silk and wools, and worsted dogs appear so suddenly on squares of cardboard and canvass that the poor things look terror-struck at the risk they have run in materializing without the capability of barking. Fancy articles of all kinds are made and as merchants are permitted to donate, why five dollars worth of embroidery silks, the same for satin, two dollars worth of ribbon, and three more for gold cord and stuffing, with a half day's work each week and every spare evening for a year, will make a sofa cushion that is perfectly splendid, and in case an artist does ten dollars worth of painting in the corners it is just gorgeous.

On summer afternoons or dull, dreary winter evenings it is pleasant to meet all ones friends in a lump, without having to call all over town, and besides you are not expected to dress elaborately for such a visiting. The good object urges one to sacrifice convenience, and the more you don't feel like going the plainer your duty to go becomes apparent. When you get there and find grandmothers knitting socks and mittens, sewing carpet rags, or piecing bed quilts with as much enthusiasm as if getting ready for their first housekeeping; and little girls, that were babies a few years before, learning to knit lines and make match safes, you feel so ashamed of your secret selfishness that you take the fine shirts home and make all the button-holes.

It is a task of ever stretching magnitude to engineer these fairs. The president and committee must know everything except to spell fatigue and discouragement. Just here let me be just to a class of men who never did think me an angel, and seem to enjoy their continuance in error. I never heard a minister endorse a church fair heartily; they only tolerate them with a bad grace. We did have one who cut patterns, made brackets, strung harps, and eat his lunch off a newspaper table cloth without caring a fig, and gave us reason to think he was going to act like somebody; and so he did. When the wall pockets, mats, exquisites and things were hung up, spread out or tipped over, and a glorious muss started, he dodged round into corners and looked as if he expected every minute would be his next, drew his breath from his boots, and supposed the ladies thought a bazar necessary, but he should be so glad when it was over. He grew so dejected when Fitz Williams exchanged a five dollar bank note for some cardboard and spiral enormities, and a basket of paper flowers with a nest of doll babies under the roses, that I imagine he thought the money changing condemned in the temple originated in a church fair.

Fitz Williams' moustache gets an extra curl by repressing swears on such occasions, for any logic that can charm money from a prudent man's pocket is strictly grammatical. If they stay away they ought to be twitted of cowardice; if they come they must expect to submit to regulations. If women work a year to advance a religious cause failure would imply that the object was unworthy, hence failure is not included among the calculations.

It is expected that those who give most are friends of the cause, and people think, I mean I do, that it looks shabby not to buy if you wish to help, consequently those who give most should buy most. Now Fitz gave those doll babies and knew their par value. The girl who sold them back to him taught him how much percentage goodness figures on generosity. There is another column to add before striking a balance. Prices that deter people from buying things they want at an ordinary store are paid for things they don't want at a church bazar. They are outwardly ashamed not to help along a good cause and secretly disgusted because a trap is set that compels them to, at least I feel so, and I guess they are no better. Besides it is doubtful economy from beginning to end.

The elegant sofa cushions, and articles of similar order, are too expensive even for Fitz Williams to buy, and the society vote to present them to those who have been most faithful in church work, and they ought to. If any one who survives a battle ever deserves a pension it is the president and officers of a sewing society. Generally one fourth of the stock remains unsold. If the goods donated had been sold at a fair price and added to the money given it would make a respectable sum, without wasting material or labor or causing vexation of spirit.

Union is power, and this is a union of laborers who give their work away to the good cause. No woman, condemned by fate to needle and thread slavery, can compete with such low prices; and the work many a woman depends on to support herself and children is absorbed into the good cause which gains but a trifle by crushing her independence. This is different from a pretty extortion. One can't help laughing at Fitz's wry face, but there is no fun when a good cause becomes an overpowering crush on one weaker and just as good. Besides it makes those ladies look like bargain hunters, who, in their zeal to help the church, consent to have their work done for half price. Pretty swindles become tiresome to the victims, and if religion is good for anything it does not require any such make-shift expedients to pay its expenses as are often resorted to. They accomplish much good in one way and in another defeat much of what they accomplish.

PEARLIE.

ADDISON.

A happy new year to all.

Old settlers say the water on the creek bottoms west of the town was never higher than last week. No material damage to bridges or highways is reported however.

Mr. Hiram Boley and family of Hillsdale, spent christmas in town with Mrs. B's parents, Mr. & Mrs. James Palmer. Their oldest son, Mr. H. A. Boley, an old Addison boy, is now engaged in the jewelry business in Ohio.

Fred Hathaway and Kline are among the ex-Addison lads who are spending the holidays at home.

Rumor says that Woodstock grange, like many of her sisters, is suffering the final agonies of death's irresistible grip. Let all submit to the inevitable with good grace as can be commanded.

The somewhat unpleasant and numerous calls of the Rollin and Woodstock Judases during the present month has effected a noticeable scarcity of material for specie payment at this place.

A fine gift tree at the M. E. church was the center of attraction on christmas eve, from which the somewhat antiquated Santa Claus dispensed his blessings among the expectant throng in the usual manner. The fitness and utility of selections formed a noticeable feature of the enterprise. The old and middle aged were remembered by articles of use and ornament, while innumerable mementoes in a less practical form convulsed the little folks with joy. "Just too utterly too too for anything." The room was beautifully illuminated by wax candles and Chinese lanterns. Above and in front of the presenter suspended the words, Merry Christmas, while permeating all was a sublime sense of adoration of the personage whose advent on earth was commemorated by the event.

In conclusion we will say that owing to the tardiness of the Vienniahian delegate, Pearlie's big named apron string affection is likely to assume a chronic form. Notwithstanding this however, the sympathetic mindfulness evidenced by her of our ease is a joy perpetual. Will the good sister please circulate the hat through the fraternity at the first grand haling sign of distress.

CLINTON.

Chas. Fisk, of Detroit, is in town.

Mrs. Geo. Kies, of Tecumseh, spent Christmas with friends in Clinton.

Miss Helen Millspaugh, teacher in Romeo, is spending her vacation with relatives in this place.

Miss Kittie Vrooman, who recently left Clinton to attend Olivet college, has accepted a position offered her as teacher in the public school of that place.

Mrs. Dwight Saxton, whose illness was reported last week, died Tuesday morning. Many friends mourn her loss, but have the comforting assurance that her life has been such as to insure her everlasting joy and peace.

Vacation has ended for two weeks the discord which was rising higher and higher in our schools. It was patent to every one that a change was needed to restore harmony, and it is to be hoped that the one now made will not be fruitless.

The lecture delivered by W. B. Affleck Monday evening failed to give entire satisfaction to the audience.—He could not have felt inspired by any attention paid him by his listeners. The sneers and inuendoes would have been more expressive of their dissatisfaction than words to one less enwrapt in his own discourse. Had it even been worthy of attention its virtue would have been lost in its length.

Prayers and protestations, entreaties and threats have alike been unavailing in securing the co-operation of the M. E. society in laying a plank walk from Tecumseh street to the Episcopal church. Since they have refused to build their share, and the present condition of the street renders navigation in that direction very unpleasant, the Episcopal society, in their generosity, have decided to lay the walk for them. Will the Methodist people appreciate their kindness?

FRANKLIN.

E. T. DeLapp is home this week for a vacation.

Congregational social at Will Crittenden's on Thursday afternoon and evening.

W. W. Kempton and family of North Adams are visiting their many friends here.

Free Hunter, who has been attending the Toledo Telegraph school, is home spending the holidays.

Mr. Andrew Burtless, who has lain for some time stricken with the typhoid fever, is recovering very slowly.

R. P. Butrick has sold his farm to P. F. Beebe. Mr. Butrick is now in search of another that will please him better.

There is some talk of reorganizing the Adelsorian society. It would be a nice thing for the place should enough take hold of it.

Miss Josie M. Butrick, of this place, the talented elocutionist and impersonator, will give a reading at Franklin Center, under the auspices of the M. E. church on Friday evening, Jan. 6, 1882.

SPRINGVILLE.

Galusha Case is home on a visit.

T. H. Mosher has a new coal cook stove.

Laur & Lyman shipped their 7th car load of hogs to Buffalo Saturday the 17th.

Eugene Groger has lately fallen heir to a nine pound dowery—a girl.

Isaac Dowling has sold his house and lot to Wm. Hand and expects to move to Chicago.

Frank and Lemuel Sheeler have gone to Vermont after another lot of fine sheep. They expect to be gone two or three weeks.

The Sons of Temperance have moved into the hall in the new hotel and will hold their meetings on Tuesday evenings.

Willard Stearns has presented the band with a very fine engraving of the State Capitol, well framed, for their new band room.

Thirty couple attended the party at the Groger house Friday evening. A very pleasant time.

A club dance is being organized at the same place. The first dance will be Friday evening, Jan. 6th,

The Christmas social for the M. E. church Sabbath school, held at Ayers' hall Monday evening, was well attended, the hall being filled at an early hour. The band was in attendance and furnished music for the occasion. The scholars were arraigned in their several classes and the presents were distributed, each scholar receiving a present. A general good time was enjoyed, especially by the younger class. Plenty of pop-corn and apples were furnished as refreshments.

RIDGEWAY.

No social this week.

What was it we had Sunday evening, any way?

Miss Velina Underwood has been quite seriously ill for the past week.

Miss Nellie Clark began teaching in Dist. No. 6, Monday.

The sidewalk leading to the church is in need of repairs.

Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick gave a very able discourse last Sabbath morning.

The week of prayer will be observed with evening meetings during the week.

Samuel Arner, aged 75 years, died last Friday morning. His sickness had been long and severe. Funeral services were held Sunday morning at the regular hour of service.

Those who would like to hear one of the best lecturers on the platform should not fail to hear Geo. W. Bain, at Tecumseh, next week Wednesday evening. His subject will be temperance.

Those along the Butler road who are dissatisfied with the wire fence will be pleased to learn that the railroad commissioner has declined to accept it as a sufficient fence. Mr. Williams has promised to be here next week to investigate the matter.

HOLLOWAY.

The meeting of the literary society to have been held last Saturday evening, was postponed on account of its interfering with Christmas festivities. The program will be presented on Saturday evening of this week.

Tom Miller is home from Washington spending the holidays.

Burt Garlinghouse returned from Chicago last week.

On Wednesday evening of last week quite a serious collision occurred on the Jackson Branch, near Chase's station. The regular freight going down, when near that place, uncoupled and the detached portion stopped on the grade near the sand pit. A special freight following immediately after, ran into it, detaching several cars and doing considerable damage. The engine of the latter train was badly demolished. The fireman jumped off uninjured but the engineer remained at his post crouching down behind the boiler, and when the crash came the cab of his engine was wrenched off and hurled away over his head beyond several frieght cars into the ditch.

Frank Smith suffered a very narrow escape from drowning during the overflow of the Raisin last week at Little Hope. He was attempting to ford it with horse and buggy, but the embankment being very narrow at that place his horse soon lost the road and got into deep water and swift current. In the struggle the horse was drowned, and Mr. Smith, after being carried some distance down stream, caught hold of a tree where he remained in his wet condition during ten hours and a half before he could be rescued. Last year a horse was drowned in the same manner at the same place. Perhaps after a few more lessons like these the people will learn not to be too venturesome.

The Christmas tree for the children of the Sunday school was a success.

Mr. C. S. Lester who is teaching at Middleville is home on a short vacation.

We are glad to see Mr. Simonds out again after being confined to his room for five weeks. He took his first ride to Tecumseh last Tuesday.

The week of prayer will be observed as usual at the Presbyterian church next week.

Mr. F. F. Rogers has been appointed township supt. of schools, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Brown. School ma'ams will please take notice.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our sincere thankfulness to friends and neighbors for their kindness during the recent affliction through which we have been called to pass.

MR. AND MRS. L. RAPPLEYE.

THE YOUNG WIDOW.

She is modest, but not bashful,
Free and easy, but not bold;
Like an apple, ripe and mellow,
Not too young and not too old
Half inviting, half repulsive,
Now advancing, and now shy—
There is mischief in her dimple,
There is danger in her eye.

She has studied human nature;
She is schooled in all her arts;
She has taken her diploma
As the mistress of all hearts.
She can tell the very moment
When to sigh and when to smile;
Oh, a maid is sometimes charming,
But a widow all the while.

Are you sad? How very serious
Will her handsome face become!
Are you angry? She is wretched.
Lonely, friendless, fearful, dumb!
Are you mirthful? How her laughter
Silver sounding will ring out!
She can lure and catch and play you,
As the angler does the trout.

Ye old bachelors of forty,
Who have grown so bald and wise
Young Americans of twenty
With the love-look in your eyes:
You may practice all the lessons
Taught by Cupid since the fall,
But I know a little widow
Who could win and fool you all.

The Brave Three Hundred.

Few Americans ever dreamed that among the dark and gloomy pines of Chancellorville was enacted a tragedy worthier to live in epic verse than the famous charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava. Only once in all the histories of the war have I seen it mentioned, and to-night my thoughts brood over the nameless graves of those unsung heroes till my soul cries out in protest against favoritisms of historic fame, and for these humble heroes I must crave the meager justice of a passing mention in the ears of their countrymen.

It was the night Stonewall Jackson received his death wound. He had completely surprised Howard's Eleventh corps, and was driving them in the wildest confusion along toward the centre of our line. In the fight they passed through a woods, just beyond which, in a clearing, lay four of Sickles' batteries, and a flying artillery battery and the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry of General Pleasanton's. The batteries were not in position but were "packed," awaiting orders. Through their lines dashed the panic-stricken fugitives, hotly pursued by Jackson's immense corps of over twenty thousand men. Infantry, artillery, ambulances, pack mules, negroes and stragglers, the worst scared men I ever looked upon, came tearing past like mad. Batteries had no commanders, but each captain excitedly acted for himself. "Battery—left wheel. Fire to the rear. In battery: Caissons pass your pieces, trot, march!" and affrightened bugler caught only the word "trot," and sounded it and no more. It rang out clear above the worse than Babel; many took it for a general stampede signal, and across the field, and down a hill, and over a stone wall near its foot, in that famous ravine, dashed several cassions and a few guns. "Fix prolong to fire retiring." "With canister—load."

On came the fugitives; nearer and nearer through the sounding woods came that Confederate yell and the rush of Stonewall Jackson's victorious legions. Sickles was almost a mile away, pushing through the woods with his splendid corps. Not a Federal musket was in sight except what the Eleventh corps men bore to the rear as rapidly as legs would carry them. We must make our fight against those tremendous odds alone—five batteries of us and three hundred cavalry—not over six hundred men all told.

On swept twenty thousand confederates, and we were not yet ready to fight. Our line was confusion worse confounded; guns stood pointing whithersoever; the excited cannoneers listened, and at the first fire one half of us would blow the other into eternity, and Stonewall would have Hooker's headquarters and double up the whole army—a cheering prospect that! The sun had set behind the woods, and through them, yet faster in the thickening gloom, rushed Jackson's troops.

Suddenly out in front of our guns rode the familiar form of General Pleasanton. Above the din arose his shrill voice: "Align those pieces!" It was a work of many minutes, and Stonewall was now just upon us. Time! oh, for ten minutes time! How to get it! There sat Major Keenan, with his three hundred horsemen. Here was a sacrifice, which, if every man was a patriot like Arnold Winkelried, would give us those precious minutes. General Pleasanton said quickly to Keenan, "Major, you must charge into those woods with your men and hold the enemy in check until I get those guns into position. You must do it at all cost." Keenan says: "It is just the same as saying 'you must be killed,' but with a smile he said, 'General, I will do it.'"

Oh, what a sight was that! Would to God some American Tennyson might see that sight and lift those humble names into immortality! Three hundred troopers with deep set spurs and flashing sabers rushed at the throats of twenty thousand armed men. Nobody had blundered, but somebody must die for the army—that was all!

So mad a blow did they strike in Jackson's very teeth that he stopped his onward rush to reform his lines. Surely there must be more coming—no single regiment could be charging his army single handed—and when no other bold riders came, then it was that brave Keenan died at the head of his regiment, and the whole platoon died with their feet in their stirrups.

But they did not die in vain. Ten minutes purchased at that fearful price to us was costlier still to Jackson. When he came on again, flesh and blood could not stand up before our terrific canister fire. His veterans quailed before the sirocco of death. He rode up to rectify his lines, was mistaken in the gathering darkness for one of our cavalrymen, and was shot by his own men.

Our "three times three" had hardly ceased to ring, when Sickles, who had rushed ahead of his veterans hurrying to our support, rode up among our guns and called out: "You have done nobly, boys! Stand firm, and in ten minutes I'll have ten thousand men here who don't know anything but fight." He was as good as his word, and quickly the old third corps filed in behind the guns, and Jackson's famous corps had received its first defeat.

Three hundred men made Thermopylæ live through centuries; six hundred men at Balaklava rode to fame in sight of the whole world, but the cynicism of America has left to slumber in unknown graves, beneath the pine groves of Chancellorville a band of men whose deed was as great and worthy of a name as those which poets have sung through all ages.

Teaching men morals is as though I had a clock that will not go, and I turned round one of the cogwheels. But faith takes the key and winds up the main spring, and the whole thing runs on readily.

History of the Almanac.

Written almanacs are of uncertain origin. The astronomer Lalande, after the most diligent search, could hear of none earlier than those of Solomen Jarchus, about A. D. 1150. A copy of an almanac written about A. D. 1300, by Petrus de Dacia, is to be found in a library at Oxford, England, in which the influence of the planets is described.

Manuscript almanacs of the middle ages are to be found in the English and Continental libraries. The British Museum and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, have almanacs of the fourteenth century. The earliest printed almanac, so far as known, is George von Purbach's, printed in 1457. This famous astronomer died at Vienna in 1461. His pupil and successor, Regiomontanus (Johann Muller), in 1474, published at Buda, Hungary, his "Kalendarium Novum" for 1475, 1494, and 1513, at twelve golden crowns a copy.

Later in the century, the "Shepherd's Kalendar" was published at Paris, of which an English translation appeared in 1497. Soon after, books of this sort began to be issued annually, the chief attraction being prognostications of the weather, and fortune-telling; astrology having greater charms for the people than astronomy. They showed "the varietie of the Ayre, and also of the Winds throughout the whole Yere, with Infortunate Time to Bie and Sell, take Medicine, Sowe, Plant, and Journey, etc. They had great currency and influence, being favored by the highest dignitaries of the church. About 1560 William Paynter published his "Four great Syers," containing "a Resolution tountriman, prouing it vtterly vnlawful to buye or vse our yeerly Prognostications." The rage for such prediction seized so powerfully on the people, that Thomas Dekker published, in 1603 "Tee Rayhns Almanacke. Foretelling of a Plague, Famine & Civill Warre. That shall happen this present yeare 1609," etc. It was dedicated "To the Lyons of the Wood, to the wilde Buckes of the Forest, to the Harts of the field, and to the whole country that are brought up wisely, yet prove Guls, and are born rich, yet dye beggers," etc. "The Owle's Epistle to the Raven," in which the Raven's Almanacke" is called "hotch-potch of calculations." The signs of the shops in Cheapside are given thus: "The Ram, the Bull, the Crab, Capricorne, etc., only the young wench (called Virgo) would by no means sit in any shop in that streete, because so many Gallants lye over the stalls, courting every handsome woman there." Famous among this class of burlesque almanacs was "Poor Robin," begun in 1663, and continued into the present century.

Under James I. almanacs were put under the censorship of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London; and the monopoly of the trade was granted to the universities and the Stationers' Company, their character remaining as before; astrology and superstition bearing full sway. The monopoly continued until 1775. The "Vox Stellarum," by Francis Moore, a quack doctor of Westminister in the seventeenth century, led the way in trumpeting medicines and nostrums of the panacea order. "The Ladies' Diary," started in 1704, discarded the old superstitions, and was a great improvement, having been continued till about thirty years since. "Poor Richard's Almanac" appeared, in Philadelphia, 1733, edited by Benjamin Franklin, and was continued for twenty-five years. It had a great influence and did great service.

In 1828 "The British Almanac" was commenced by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, and soon wrought an entire revolution in this class of publications, putting an effectual end to the reign of astrology. It was followed in 1830 by "The American Almanac," at Boston.

Home Making.

Did you ever build a house? I do not mean a house to rent or a house to sell, but a house for your own home? If not, you have missed a very sweet experience, not only in the building, but in the realization of your hopes when you go to live under your roof-tree. Your own, not because you have paid so many dollars for it, but doubly precious because of the loving labor every room has cost you, the bright pictures of home happiness you have imagined as the stone and brick grew into shape and comeliness, the self-denial you practiced to secure this ornament or that comfort, the delightful surprises you planned for the dear ones for whom after all the house is being built, the long consultations with your wife as you eagerly watched the workmen. You can easily give a reason for every nook and corner of the whole structure; even its defects are dear to you because of some remembrance associated with them; this room is larger than is necessary at present, because the children are growing and will soon be gathering a good deal of company about them; this one is inconveniently small that the other may be larger; this is of peculiar shape to humor a whim of the wife; this odd window was placed in that sunny corner for her plants; the hall is square and roomy because all love to gather there, and a hall is a sort of index to the house; it should tell of comfort and warmth, and the glow of good cheer throughout; this small room which a stranger might consider illy lighted and inconvenient, has a thousand uses, and indeed, could not be dispensed with; a narrow passage here is to accomodate the boys, and enable them to slip in from their work and change their clothes before coming to table, or appearing in the parlor. A sunny room for the mother, a cozy corner for the father, light, cheerfulness, room, plenty of fresh air for the children and as much attention as possible to the peculiar tastes of each member of the family. The time spent, the economy practiced, the sweet anticipations, the lingering over small details, these make the home far more precious than any money value can estimate. Do not, therefore, buy a house if you seek a permanent home, but wait and build for yourselves. More than the house shall you build. As it takes on symmetrical and tasteful proportions, there will surely grow in your hearts a tenderer love and a truer value of all the good things that cluster round, and center in a genuine home.

Had covetous men, as the fable goes of Briareus, each of them one hundred hands, they would all of them be employed in grasping and gathering, and hardly one of them in giving or laying out, but all in receiving and none in restoring: a thing in itself so monstrous that nothing in nature besides is like it, except it be death and the grave, the only things I know which are always carrying off the spoils of the world and never making restitution. For otherwise, all the parts of the universe, as they borrow of one another, so they still pay what they borrow, and that by so just and well balanced an equality that their payments always keep pace with their receipts.—[Dryden.

Only a Mechanic.

Only a mechanic! Well, for my part, I hardly know any one I respect more than I do a faithful, skilled mechanic, who puts thought into his handicraft and knows why he does things.

His hands may be hard, and his working clothes rough, but I wonder what we should do without him—you and I! We should sit under a rock, perhaps, cooking our food on a bit of stick over a fire of dead branches without a roof to cover us and certainly destitute of stoves, ranges, and stationary tubs.

Only a mechanic! Look at the great buildings that line our streets, which vast crowds enter without fear; think of the long stretch of sidewalks, the bright gas lamps, the pure, cold water to be had by turning a little faucet!

Think of the carriages we ride in—the railroad cars, the steam engine. Think of almost anything we use, from a fork to a hair-pin, and then turn up your nose at "a mechanic" if you dare. Mechanics, led on by scientific men, have made every improvement we rejoice in. They are not all inventors, but all inventors are mechanics of the better sort—mechanics who have original thoughts.

Mechanics are by no means an ignorant set of men, either. They generally keep pretty well up with the times. They educate their families. They have neat little homes, where you often find pianos and good books. Thanks to the advantages they have here, they are in this country at least, well-spoken and well-mannerd people, with no servility about them, and no necessity for being servile. On holidays they dress as well as anybody else, and are often more comfortable and grow a great deal richer than people who speak so contemptuously of "a mechanic," without really thinking what a mechanic is, or what—if he is a genius—he may be. It would be an uncomfortable world, I assure you, my dear, if mechanism and the mechanics were left out of it. It would be a great deal better to have none of the more dainty sort of folk, for, left to themselves, they could not do much, and would go back to the unpleasant condition of the cave dwellers, who had not a mechanic amongst them.—M. K. D.

Increase and Decrease.

The census shows that the proportion of voters to the population is 1 to 5 74-100. The proportion of persons troubled with kidney and liver disorders has been alarmingly increasing, but since the almost universal use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure these diseases are rapidly diminishing.

Who Struck Billy Patterson?

Many persons have heard the question, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" without knowing the origin of it. William Patterson was a very wealthy tradesman or merchant of Baltimore in the state of Maryland. In the early days of Franklin county he bought up a great many tracts or land in the county, and spent a good portion of his time in looking after his interests there. He was said to be as strong as a bear and as brave as a lion, but like all brave men he was a lover of peace, and indeed, a good pious man. Nevertheless his wrath could be excited to a fighting pitch. On one occassion he attended a public gathering in the lower part of Franklin county, at some district court ground. During the day the two opposing bullies and their friends raised a row and a general fight was the consequence. At the beginning of the affray, and before the fight began, Billy Patterson ran into the crowd to persaude them not to fight, but to make peace and be friends. But his efforts for peace were unavailing, and while making them some of the crowd in the general melee struck Billy Patterson a severe blow from behind. Billy at once became fighting mad, and cried out at the top of his voice, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" No one could or would tell him who was the guilty party. He then proposed to give any man a hundred dollars who would tell him "Who struck Billy Patterson." From $100 he rose to $1,000; but not $1,000 would induce any man to tell him "Who struck Billy Patterson." And years afterward, in his will, he related the above facts and bequeathed $1,000 to be paid by his executors to the man who would tell "Who struck Billy Patterson." His will is recorded in the ordinary's office at Cranesville, Franklin county, Ga., and anyone curious about the matter can there find it and verify the preceding statements.

Gambling in Deadwood.

A very characteristic incident of life in the wild and reckless West occurred in one of the popular saloons of Deadwood the other afternoon. A party of four were playing poker, and the bets were running high. A couple of the boys got to bucking at one another, and a huge pile of greenbacks and chips was soon piled between them. At last one "called" the other, and he showed three queens. The other quietly turned over three kings.

"Take the money," said the patron of the ladies, as though asking the other to drink.

The man of many kings reached over to take in the pot, when one of the other players interfered and claimed that one of the kings in the hand of the winner belonged to him, unless there were five in the pack, as he laid down two of them when the heavy betting began. He of the queens rose up quietly pulled a murderous-looking bull-dog revolver, which he placed in unpleasant proximity; "Drop it!"

He dropped it, you bet; and then, without another word, the game went on as though nothing had happened.

Terrible Accident

Necessitating a Surgical Operation—Loving Mother Attempts to Take a Pair of Shears from Her Child. PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner, of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the sheares entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could but intensely painful inflamation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye.—Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Roundout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to the pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the Liver and Kidneys. Cures constipation, and all weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all our druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle.

Take Good Care of Your Cows.

There is a loss that all farmers can guard against and that is the effects of the winter storms, both of continued cold rains and early snow storms, that come so suddenly and chill the cows to the very marrow. It makes no difference in how good flesh the cow may be, the sudden cold will shock the system and there will be an almost total suspension of milk, the draughts upon the system to withstand the cold calling for the part that should furnish the milk supply. It is not a great job to put the cows in the warm stable, and from those full stores that have been provided, so feed them that there will be no diminishing of the milk. The deal of "toughening an old cow to stand the cold" is one of the relics—we had almost said barbarisms—that needs to be expunged from every dairyman's creed. It is a practice that requires a double restorative in the way of care and feed and has its after effects that could have been avoided if the stable and a liberal feed had been substituted.

The careful owner of a cow should always consider that the udder is a highly nervous and vascular organ, provided with a finely diffused circulatory and secretive apparatus, and that a slight injury may have a very serious effect upon it. It is most probable that the cell structure of the milk-glands is itself the source from which the milk is derived, and that these cells are replenished from the arterial blood conveyed to and distributed through the udder. When, therefore, it is considered that in a cow giving thirty pounds of milk in twenty-four hours, all this quantity is actually produced by the two fold change of blood into cells and of cells into milk and cream, the activity of the organ which performs this enormous work must be, indeed, wonderful; and it should not be surprising that a supposed insignificant circumstance may produce some unexpected and serious results. Bearing this in mind, one who keeps a cow should ever be watchful and cautious against the least variation of treatment that may so easily affect the conditions of the milk.

The Harmless, Useful Toad.

A writer in the London Journal gives some interesting statements respecting the toad. In the matter of feeding, he says the toad is not very particular, either as to quality or quantity. Anything that creeps or crawls will do for him—wood lice, beetles, spiders, slugs, worms, even snails with their shells, are put out of sight as if by magic, for he has a peculiar way of taking his prey. He watches the moving insect for a second or two, then suddenly darting out his tongue while at a distance of one or two inches, the insect is snatched up and swallowed instantly. One evening he gave one a wasp and a bumble-bee; both were snapped up directly they commenced to move, apparently without causing the toad the slightest discomfort, though they must have reached his stomach in a tolerably active condition.

In plant-houses, especially forcing-houses, where insects increase their numbers so rapidly at all seasons, the toad's services are especially valuable, and if a suitable ladder, made of a narrow board with bits of lath tacked on it two inches apart, be set in a corner, slanting from the floor to the stage he will climb it, and thus be enabled to make himself still more useful.

But perhaps the most remarkable fact concerning the toad is, that though he can, and does, eat a great deal, he can exist a long time without eating anything. Years ago he buried one for a month in the earth, as an experiment, and when dug up it was apparently as well as ever. More recently, having been bothered with myriads of wood-lice in an early cucumber-house, and not being able to find toads in February, he, later on, when they became plentiful, buried three in a nine-inch pot, with a slate on the top, eighteen inches under ground, that he might have them handy for the next early forcing season. But that season he did not require them, so they remained buried until the following one, and were then, on being taken up, apparently not much the worse for their eighteen months' fast, though they didn't have any ice-water or alcoholic baths.

What a Volcano Can Do.

Cotapaxi, in 1738, threw its fiery rockets 3,000 feet above its crater, while in 1754 the blazing mass, struggling for an outlet roared so that its awful voice was heard at a distance of more than 600 miles. In 1797 the crater of Tunguragua, one of the great peaks of the Andes, flung out torrents of mud, which dammed up the rivers, opened new lakes, and in valleys 1,000 feet wide made deposits 600 feet deep. The stream from Vesuvius, which, in 1737, passed through Torre del Greco, contained 33,000,000 cubic feet of solid matter, and in 1793 when Torre del Greco was destroyed second time, the mass of lava amounted to 45,000,000 cubic feet. In 1760 Ætna poured forth a flood which covered 84 square miles of surface and measured only 1,000,000,000 cubit feet. On this occasion the sand and scoria formed the Monte Rosini near Nicholosa, a cone of two miles in circumference, and 4,000 feet high. The stream thrown out by Ætna in 1810 was in motion at the rate of a yard a day for nine months after the eruption; and it is on record that the lava of the same mountain, after a terrible eruption, was not thoroughly cool and consolidated for ten years after the event. In the eruption of Vesuvius, A. D. 79, the scoria and ashes vomited forth far exceeded the entire bulk of the mountain; while in 1660 Ætna disgorged 20 times its own mass. Vesuvius has sent its ashes as far as Constantinople, Syria, and Egypt; it hurled stones eight pounds in weight to Pompeii, a distance of six miles, where similar masses were tossed up 2,000 feet above the summit. Cotapaxi has projected a block of 100 cubic yards in volume a distance of nine miles, and Sumbawa, in 1815, during the most terrible eruption on record, sent its ashes as far as Java, a distance of three hundred miles of surface, and out of a population of 15,000 souls only 20 escaped.

How He Caught Him.—Dana Krum, one of the conductors on the Erie Railroad, was approached before train time by an unknown man, who spoke to him as if he had known him for years. "I say, Dana," said he, "I have forgotten my pass, and I want to go to Susquehanna; I am a fireman on the road, you know?" But the conductor told him he ought to have a pass with him. It was the safest way. Pretty soon Dana came along to collect tickets. Seeing his man, he spoke when he reached him. "Say, my friend, have you the time with you?"

"Yes," said he, as he pulled out a watch, "It is twenty minutes past nine."

"Oh, it is, is it? Now, if you don't show me your pass, or fare, I will stop the train. There is no railroad man that I ever saw who would say 'twenty minutes past nine.' He would say, 'nine twenty.'"

He settled.

Anecdote of Longfellow.

Professor Luigi Monti tells a pleasant story of Henry W. Longfellow. For many years this gentleman had been in the habit of dining with the poet every Saturday. One Christmas Day, as he was walking briskly toward the old historic house, he was accosted by a little girl about 12 years old, who inquired the way to Longfellow's home. He told her it was some distance down the street, but if she would walk along with him he would show her. When they reached the gate, she said: "Do you think I can go in the yard?" "Oh, yes," said Signor Monti, "Do you see the room on the left? That is where Martha Washington held her receptions 100 years ago. If you look at the window on the right, you will probably see a white-haired gentleman reading a paper. Well, that will be Mr. Longfellow." She looked gratified and happy at the unexpected pleasure of really seeing the man whose poems she said she loved. As Signor Monti drew near the house, he saw Mr. Longfellow standing with his back against the window, his head of course, out of sight. When he went in the kind-hearted Italian said, "Do look out of the window and bow to that little girl, who wants to see you very much!" "A little girl wants to see me very much—where is she?" He hastened to the door, and beckoning with his hand, called out: "Come here, little girl, come here, if you want to see me!" She needed no second invitation, and, after shaking her hand and asking her name, he kindly took her into the house, showed her the "old clock on the stairs," the chair made from the village smithy's chestnut tree, presented to him by the Cambridge children, and the beautiful pictures and souvenirs gathered in the many years of foreign residence. I am sure that child will carry all her life delightful memories of her Christmas call at Mr. Longfellow's.

Alderman Tucker, Boston, says you may state that I have paid for medicine and treatment in 20 years $3,000, without receiving permanent benefit. Entirely cured of his disease, saltrheum, by Cuticura Remedies.

How We Take Holidays.

The American's regard for his national holidays is worth studying by a Herbert Spencer. Sentimentally we like the Fourth of July, but practically we hate it. We are too lazy a people in carrying out our sentiments to become excited over holidays. We have none of the overgush of the Poles, and none of the cool, comfortable common sense of the Germans. We would like to spend the fourth on July far away from the noise of fire crackers, while we were in a boat idly floating down a stream. Christmas has become to us merely a day for presents, and the extravagant and selfish side of the day is growing upon us. It is no longer a birthday, with sweet morning songs, but a stocking day, rollicking to be sure, but still a rather selfish sort of day. New Year's day is a kind of fifty per cent. Christmas. None of us love it, for it carries with it an idea of formality. Thanksgiving day comes with more flavor than any other holiday. Its pleasures seem to be brought in a market wagon. It is really our great feast day.—New York Herald.

"Nutricine."

"Nutricine" is the name of a new kind of food recently invented. Its preparation is thus described: Raw meat, from which bones and tendons have been carefully excised, is passed into a suitable machine along with nitrogenized alimentary substances, such as bread, to absorb the water of the meat, and possibly to form new combinations with it. After the mass thus prepared is dried in a stove under a mild heat, it is pulverized and sifted; a powder of an agreeable taste, and varying from a yellow to gray in color, is the result. When albumen, fats or gummed water is added to this powder, solid cakes or cubes may be broken up as occasion may require, for soups or sauces. This nutricine is said to be admirably qualified to sustain physical vigor, and it can be preserved for any length of time, if it is kept from the deteriorating influences of an atmosphere charged with moisture and from the action of heat.

Society Belles.

On account of its remarkably delicate and lasting fragrance society belles are loud in their praises of Floreston's Cologne.

If varnished work becomes defaced, and begins to show white spots, take equal parts of linseed-oil and turpentine, put them in a vial, shake till thoroughly incorporated, then pour in small quantities on a soft cloth, and apply to the spots. Repeat till the color is restored, and then with another clean soft cloth wipe the mixture off carefully. In deeply carved furniture, if the dust has settled so as to be difficult to remove, use first a stiff-haired paint-brush to get out as much of the dust as possible before using the wet sponge; then roll the sponge up in the hand, and rub it into the carving two or three times; rinse, and rub dry with the chamois, and finish off by wrapping the dry skin over the ivory needle, and drying every damp place in the carving. This need not take more time than is occupied in telling it. If the furniture is often dusted, it will not require any more, and it will look fresh and bright for years with such care.

Dr. C. C. Hiatt says: Twenty years' special practice with children has led me to test Rinehart's Worm Lozengers. I give them my unqualified endorsement. For sale at Wright's.

One of the most remarkable traits of the peculiar people in Alaska is their aversion to salt, which they will not eat in any form. They have been seen, when offered a choice piece of corned-beef on the vessel to taste it, and, on finding that it had been salted, spit out the mouthful with a wry face and throw the remainder on the deck in disgust. No matter how putrid a whale or seal may be, they eat it, raw and unseasoned, with evident relish.

PILES! PILES!! PILES!!!

A Sure Cure Found at Last. No One Need Suffer.

A sure cure for the Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. Williams (an Indian remedy), called Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 and 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions, Instruments, and Electuaries do more harm than good. Williams' Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a poultice, gives instant and painless relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and nothing else.

Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry, of Cleveland, says about Dr. Williams' Indian Pile Ointment: "I have used scores of pile cures, but it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. Williams' Indian Ointment."

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S

CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 29, 1881.

THE HERALD FOR 1882.

Again we greet the patrons of the Tecumseh HERALD with a friendly welcome, and present to them our plans for the coming year. The HERALD has become so well established in the territory where its circulation extends, and its character has become so well known, that an extended notice of our future aims and prospects seems unnecessary. Still our friends have a right to know what we purpose to do during the next twelve months, whether any important changes are on the tapis, what kind of a newspaper we design giving them, and upon what basis we wish to conduct the business department of the office.—The program which we have adopted for the guidance of the HERALD during the ensuing year may be more fully explained under two heads:—First, its editorial management; secondly, its business management.

In the editorial conduct of the paper the same general rules will guide us that have obtained in the office since the present proprietors took the helm. Our chief aim will be to make the HERALD a first-class LOCAL NEWSPAPER. We shall not attempt to compete with the New York and Chicago weeklies in the amount of general news and miscellaneous reading furnished, for our efforts in that direction would prove a failure, but in the field of local news, adapted to the wants and wishes of the residents of Northern Lenawee, we can and will compete with any other newspaper in existence. Increased attention will be given to county and state news.—Our corps of township correspondents will be enlarged and improved; in fact, the fruits of our policy in this direction are already apparent.—Special pains will be taken to give full reports of all public meetings of a general character held in Tecumseh or vicinity. The farmers will be remembered in the proceedings of Farmers' Clubs, and when the rush of holiday advertising is over a special page will be devoted to their interests. At the same time we shall not neglect the women and children, for a few columns of choice miscellany will be given each week for their instruction and edification. We shall also pay considerable attention to current matters of political interest, such as civil-service reform, the discussion of the tariff, etc. Our business is better systematized than ever before, and the better portion of one man's time will be regularly given hereafter to the editorial department of the office.

In our business management we shall make one or two important changes. In lieu of the premiums given in the former years, we shall expend the money heretofore used for that purpose on the newspaper itself, and thus furnish our patrons a better newspaper for the same yearly subscription. We have a few of last year's receipt books still on hand. These will be given to all advance paying subscribers for 1882 until the supply shall have been exhausted. We have also resolved to adopt the advance payment plan and rigidly adhere to it. There is no good reason why a man should not pay in advance for his copy of the Clinton News or Tecumseh HERALD or Adrian Times, exactly as he does for his New York World, or Detroit Tribune or Michigan Farmer. Country editors, no less than those living in the city, must buy bread and butter and fuel, pay rent, purchase stock and hire workmen. These things cannot be accomplished without hard cash or currency with which to foot the bills. The old slipshod pay-as-you-please method works mischief both to publisher and subscriber. The publisher is deprived of funds which are legally and morally his due, and is thus forced to let his own debts run, to the wear and tear of his conscience and the detriment of his credit. The subscriber becomes heedless and careless about paying his bills and contracts bad business habits which may forever cripple his usefulness. This plan too compels prompt subscribers to carry the dilatory ones, and thus indirectly it places a premium upon negligence. We shall allow our friends a lee-way of one month in which to adapt themselves to the new regulation, but all subscriptions not credited in advance on or before the first of February next will be discontinued. We trust that the HERALD's numerous family may be still further increased during 1882, and that the members thereof may all enjoy a happy and prosperous year.

THE

PHILADELPHIA TIMES

Now stands confessedly at the head of Philadelphia journalism in all that makes a thoroughly complete, general and family newspaper. It is more complete in its news, in its special correspondence, in its varied contributions on all subjects of popular interest and in all the qualities of a newspaper for the family circle and for the business man than any of its contemporaries, because its facilities and resources are equal to every want of a first class national journal.

"THE WEEKLY TIMES" has nearly doubled its former large circulation during the year. Its contributors from week to week are among the foremost men of the nation, and no department of news or literature is slighted in any number on any pretext. It is adapted as well to women as to men; hence, although its political intelligence is full and accurate and its political editorials free and fearless, liberal provision is made for literary, dramatic and musical matters, travels and adventure, fiction, poetry, fashions and the chronicle of current social events. In all these departments the pens of the best writers are engaged, while selections from other journals are made with care, taste and fullness that are unsurpassed.

The "ANNALS OF THE WAR" embracing chapters of unwritten history contributed by prominent actors in the war of the rebellion, are a valuable feature of the paper and have become a recognized depository of such matters, whether from Northern or Southern sources. This department, as well as all others, will be kept fully up to the high standard of former years.

Culinary.

Surprise Cake.—One egg, one cup sugar, half cup butter, one cup sweet milk, three teaspoons of baking powder; flavor to taste. Make it a scant half cup of butter, one and a half cups flour. This is a good receipt for doughnuts.

Popcorn Balls.—These are easily made. To one gallon of popcorn take half a pint of molasses or sugar; put into a skillet and let it come to a boil, and then pour it over the corn; grease your hands with sweet butter, and make the whole into balls of such size as you please.

Scotch Broth. Put a teacupful of pearl barley into four quarts of cold water, let boil, add two onions, two turnips, two carrots cut in slices and one carrot grated; boil slowly for three hours, add salt and pepper to taste before removing from the fire. A Scotch recipe.

King George's Pudding.—One pint bread crumbs, half pint of flour, teaspoonful of baking powder, sifted in the flour, a little salt, half a pound of raisins, quarter of a pound of currants, quarter of a pound of chopped suet, coffee cup of milk, one egg; tied tightly in a bag and boiled three hours, to be eaten with hard sauce.

Lady Fingers.—Four ounces of sugar, yolks of four eggs, mix well four ounces of flour, mix again; if too thick add another whole egg, a half teaspoon of flavoring. Beat whites to a froth and stir in. Squeeze through a funnel made of writing paper into pans lined with buttered paper. These are used for Charlotte Russe.

Scrambled Eggs With Cheese.—Grate an ordinary sharp cheese, a tablespoonful for every two eggs; put some butter into a frying pan, and when melted, throw in the cheese, stir for a minute or two until the cheese melts; add the eggs, pepper and salt, mix with a fork until cooked. This is a nice side dish at dinner, or may be served with fried bacon and baked potatoes at breakfast.

Favorite Meat Pie.—Take cold roast meat of any kind, slice it thin, cut it rather small, lay it with gravy, sufficiently peppered and salted, in a meat pie-dish. If liked a small onion may be chopped fine and sprinkled over it. Over the meat pour a couple of stewed tomatoes, a little more pepper, and a thick layer of mashed potatoes. Bake slowly in a moderate oven till the top is a light brown.

Strawberry Custard.—Make nice boiled custard of a quart of milk and the yolks of five eggs properly sweetened. Boil till it thickens to the right consistency, take it off the fire, and put in the flavoring. Take a gill of sugar and a pint of ripe strawberries; crush them together and pass through a fine strainer. Take the whites of four of the eggs, and while beating them to a stiff froth add a gill of sugar, a little at a time. Then to the sugar and eggs add the sweetened strawberry juice, beating all the while to keep it stiff. This makes a beautiful pink froth, which is to be placed on top of the custard.

Mark Twain on Blue Jays.

"There's more to a blue-jay than any other creature. He has got more moods and more different kinds of feelings than any other creature; and mind you, whatever a blue-jay feels he can put into language. And no mere commonplace language, either, but rattling out-and-out book talk—and bristling with metaphor, too—just bristling! And as for command of language—why, you never see a blue-jay get stuck for want of a word. No man ever did. They just boil out of him. And another thing, I've noticed a good deal, and there's no bird, or cow, or anything that uses as good grammar as a blue-jay. You may say a cat uses good grammar, well, a cat does—but you let a cat get excited once; you let a cat get to pulling fur with another on a shed, nights, and you'll hear grammar that will give you the lockjaw. Ignorant people think its the noise which fighting cats make that is so aggraving, but it ain't so, it's the sickening grammer they use. Now, I've never heard a jay use bad grammar but very seldom; and when they do they are as ashamed as a human; they shut right down and leave.

You may call a jay a bird. Well, so he is, in a measure—because he's got feathers on him, and don't belong to no church, perhaps; but otherwise he is just as much a human as you be. And I'll tell you why. A jay's gifts and instincts and feelings and interests cover the whole ground. A jay will lie, a jay will steal, a jay will deceive, a jay will betray; and four times out of five a jay will go back on his solemnest promise. The sacredness of an obligation is a thing which you can't cram into no blue-jay's head. Now, on top of all this, there's another thing; a jay can outswear any gentleman in the mines. You think a cat can swear; well a cat can; but you give a blue-jay a subject that calls for his reserve powers and where is your cat? Don't talk to me—I know too much about this thing. And there's yet another thing, in the one little particular of scolding—just good, clean out-and-out scolding, a blue-jay can lay over anything, human or divine. Yes, sir, a jay is everything that a man is. A jay can cry, a jay can laugh, a jay can feel shame, a jay can reason and plan and discuss, a jay likes gossip and scandal, a jay has got a sense of honor, a jay knows when he is an ass just as well as you do—maybe better. If a jay isn't human he'd better take in his sign, that's all.—Jim Baker, in "The Tramp Abroad."

The Change in the Frog

Nowhere in the animal kingdom is there so favorable an opportunity for peeping into nature's workshop as in the metamorphoses of the frog. This animal is a worm when it comes from the egg, and remains so the first four days of its life, having neither eyes nor ears, nostrils, nor respiratory organs. It crawls, it breathes through its skin. After a while a neck is grooved into the flesh, and its soft lips are hardened into a horny beak. The different organs, one after another, bud out; then a pair of branching gills, and last, a long and limber tail. The worm has become a fish. Three or four days more elapse, and the gills sink back into the body, while in their place others come much more complex, arranged in vascular turfs, 112 in each, but they, too, have their day, and are absorbed, together with their framework of bone and cartilage, to be succeeded by an entirely different breathing apparatus, the initial of a second correlated groupe of radical change. Lungs are developed, the mouth widened, the horny back converted into rows of teeth, the stomach, the abdomen, the intestines, prepared for the reception of animal food instead of vegetable; four limbs, fully equipped with hip and shoulder bones, with nerves and blood vessels, push out through the skin, while the tail, being now supplanted by them as a means of locomotion, is carried away piecemeal by the absorbents, and the animal passes the balance of its days as an air-breathing and flesh-feeding batrachian.

A Literary Curiosity.

The following rather curious piece of composition was recently placed upon the blackboard at a teachers' institute, and a prize of a Webster's Dictionary offered to any person who would read and pronounce every word correctly. The book was not carried off, however, as 12 was the lowest number of mistakes made in pronunciation:

"A sacrilegious son of Belial, who suffered from bronchitis, having exhausted his finances, in order to make good the deficit, resolved to ally himself to a comely, lenient and docile young lady of the Malay or Caucasian race. He accordingly purchased a calliope and coral necklace of a chameleon hue, and securing a suite of rooms at a principal hotel, engaged the head waiter as his coadjutor. He then dispatched a letter of the most unexceptional caligraphy extant, inviting the young lady to a matinee. She revolted at the idea, refused to consider herself sacrificable to his desires, and sent a polite note of refusal, on receiving which, he procured a carbine and a bowie knife and said he would not now forge letters hymenial with the queen, went to an isolated spot, severed his jugular vein, and discharged the contents of his carbine into his abdomen. The debris was removed by the coroner."

The mistakes in pronunciation were made on the following words: Sacrilegious, Belial, bronchitis, exhausted, finances, deficit, comely, lenient, docile, Malay, calliope, chameleon, suite, coadjutor, caligraphy, matinee, sacrificable, carbine, hymenial, isolated, jugular and debris.

CADETS.—Each Congressional district and territory, and the District of Columbia is entitled to have one Cadet at the Academy. The appointments are made by the Secretary of War, at the request of the representative or delegate in Congress. The person appointed must be an actual resident. Candidates must be between 17 and 21 years of age at least five feet in height, free from any infectious or immoral disorder, and every other ailment which would unfit them for military duty. They must be well versed in reading, writing, orthography, arithmetic, elements of English grammar, descriptive geography, particularly of our own country, and the history of the U. S. Each must attend eight years unless sooner discharged. Uncle Sam settles the bills from the time of their acceptance. While at the academy they are supposed to be in the service of the U. S. and draw pay. When he graduates a cadet is assigned to duty and receives pay.

Footstools and ottomans may be manufactured out of old boxes, peck, or half-bushel measures, or long store boxes. Nail old bagging loosely on the top, leaving one side open until you fill it evenly and plumply with cotton, hay, or moss, or "excelsior" (a kind of popular shavings made expressly to pack furniture in.) Then nail the canvass tightly all around the sides and over the top, and cover with embroidery, or with material to match the furniture. Cover the edges with gimp or fringe. Nail a piece of oilcloth over the bottom to make it slide easily over the carpet while moving it. The top may be fastened by a piece of strong leather or hinges to one side of the box and stuffed, and covered and trimmed as described previously; thus not only the footstool or ottoman is secured, but a box for work and pieces, or anything required. In this case there should be castors on the bottom to move it without trouble when filled.

It is not an easy thing to wash windows so that they will look clear and well polished, and if soap suds are used, it is quite impossible to do it. The old-fashioned way of taking out all the windows and washing them in soap-suds, and setting them aside to dry, after the suds has been rinsed off, is, to be sure, the easiest way of cleaning them, but it is also the worst way to make them look clear and bright. First brush them off well with a sponge or brush that comes for the purpose, and then wrap a bit of cloth about a sharp-pointed stick, and wipe out the dust that adheres to the corners, then take some weak tea, boiling hot, and add to it a table-spoonful of alcohol and a few drops of aqua ammonia, or a bit of carbonate of ammonia the size of an English walnut. Dip a piece of sponge or flannel, or of old canton flannel into it, and rub the glass one way only until it shines clear. Wipe it off with another cloth, rubbing it until well polished.

White Chalk.

Chalk is such a common thing that it is difficult to think there can be anything very wonderful about it; but when carefully studied and examined, few substances turn out to be more extraordinary. Chalk is wonderful on account of its forming a large part of the crust of the earth, and because it consists of countless fragments of minute creatures which were once alive; moreover, the manner in which the bold white cliffs stand up against the sea, century after century, is worth considering, as is also the way in which the long layers of flints, one over the other, were formed. Chalk is a very old substance, for the cliffs have stood by the sea-shore longer than the oldest history tells of; and when inland, the white chalk is often found in sinking deep wells through clay and sand. Geologists have proved that although most of the chalk now forms on dry land, high hills, and bold cliffs, yet it was produced layer after layer at the bottom of a very deep sea, and was gradually lifted up by the internal forces of the globe to its present position. It is found in a great many of the counties of England quite on the surface of the ground, and in others it is situated deep down in the earth, being covered up with other soils. Vast regions in North and South America, Ireland, Denmark, Belgium, Germany, France, Algiers, and India are covered with the powdery-looking mineral we call white chalk, and much of it under the sea, and is occasionally found out in sinking foundations for lighthouses. Not only does the chalk form the surface of the ground over a large portion of the earth, but it is also very deep. A cliff, although 500 or 600 feet high, does not show all the chalk, for boring proves that it goes down deeper than the level surface at its foot. In England, especially in the south-eastern counties, the chalk is very deep, and extends downwards for 1,200 feet. The upper part, as is well known, has many layers of black flints in it, one over the other, and extending for miles; the lower 700 feet of chalk has no flints in it, but forms in many foreign countries high mountains with tall peaks and precipices, very unlike the rounded downs and sloping valleys in England. It was mentioned that some soils were on top of the chalk in certain places. Now, there is a capital example of this in London. There is chalk on the Surrey side of the Thames, but it does not appear on the north side. When a well is dug on the south side, chalk is soon come to; but in London itself a dark blue clay is found, and it is no less than 800 feet deep. The clay must be pierced by the boring-machine for rather more than this depth before chalk is reached. Of course, all this great mass of clay, double the height of St. Paul's, was collected gradually on top of the chalk, and it was not done in a day. Many thousands of years must have elapsed whilst it was being made, for it was the washings of distant hills brought down by many streams, like the clays which are now forming at the bottom of lakes. There are all sorts of wonderful things in this clay, such as skeletons of great crocodiles, alligators, beavers, fish, birds, and turtles, masses of decayed fruits like cocoanuts and pineapples, and vast quantities of small shells. But the chalk is under all these, and is therefore older. If a small piece of chalk is moistened and rubbed on a slip of glass, and placed under a powerful microscope, myriads of very small things are seen. Some are fragments of larger things, but the greater part consists of the tiny skeletons and shells of what is called animalcules. Much of the chalk consists, also, of round grains, which, when broken down, are found to contain other grains arranged in circles round a centre. These are all remnants of very small creatures, which were once alive. So small were they, that 10,000 of them placed in a row would not make up an inch in length. The shapes of the little shells are very pretty, and they are beautifully marked with dots and lines, so as to form very interesting objects under a good miscroscope. Every piece of chalk contains a vast quantity of these things, and also grains of what is called carbonate of lime.

By diligent search through the chalk quarries many curiosities have been found, and the skeletons of flying reptiles, huge lizards, crocodiles, and beautiful shells, and great quantities of sea-urchins and star-fish may be seen in the British Museum taken from the chalk. Some of these are very large, but the bulk of the chalk all over the world is made up of very minute things invisible to the naked eye. If the chalk extends for thousands of square miles, and is 1,200 feet thick, what incalculable millions of the remains of minute creatures there must be in it! The tiny animalcules lived in the old ocean, and as they died in their hard shells fell to the bottom, and in course of ages the mass of the chalk was thus formed as a sediment in the deep sea. It is impossible to conceive how long this sediment took to collect, but it is easy to form an idea how long a small portion of chalk takes to be removed. Thus, the island of Thanet is about ten miles long and five broad, and the chalk is, in round numbers, 1,200 feet thick: there are, therefore, about 42,000,000,000 tons weight of it. Supposing 1,000 men and 1,000 horses and carts to do always what is called a good day's work, it would take them 20,000 years to remove the chalk, provided it were dug up ready for carting. The history of chalk is, therefore, very wonderful, for it was gradually deposited in the deep ocean, being formed of the remains of the smallest sea animalcules and of the skeletons of the large creatures that died in the water. After 1,200 or more feet of this fine white sediment were formed, the whole was lifted up nearly to the surface, and then a clay was formed on the top in many places. The creatures whose remains are found in the clay are not of the same kind as those found in the chalk, and were in existence when this country was in a tropical climate.

No man who builds up to his line has the right to open a window upon his neighbor's land. The main reason for refusing such a privilege is that after twenty years, employment it becomes a vested right, so that the owner of the land upon which the windows open cannot build it up, and thus his own walls close up the windows. An owner of a lot uptown allowed his neighbors on each side to open side windows to their houses upon it, supposing that they could only enjoy it until he wished to build. After twenty-one years he found that he could not build so as to close the windows, nor could he sell the lot for anything like the value it should have represented.

Teaching men morals is as though I had a clock that will not go, and I turned round one of the cogwheels. But faith takes the key and winds up the main spring, and the whole thing runs on readily.

Saltness of the Sea.

The saltness of the sea is one of those wonderful facts which we are apt to take for granted, without inquiring as to the cause of which it is the effect. That the sea is salt everybody knows; but why salt? Why are not the rivers salt also? The degree to which saltness pervades sea-water varies. Some parts of the ocean are saturated with saline matter, others are almost brackish. The water of the Caribbean sea is dense compared with that of the Baltic in the proportion of 0·12 to 0·19. The kind of salt, however, to be found in sea-water is universally the same, whatever the density of the water may be. Local causes may effect water to a certain extent, but experience shows that the salts extracted from sea water, in whatever part of the world, are substantially the same in kind, the only difference being in quantity. The salts contained are: Chloride of sodium (common salt), chloride of potassium, chloride of calcium, chloride of magnesium, bromide of magnesium, sulphate of lime (common chalk), sulphate of magnesia, carbonate of magnesia.

The actual contents are set out in full because there is a common belief, founded on a confusion of terms, that common table salt is the only ingredient in sea water. As regards the aggregate quantity of salts contained, some idea may be formed of it by stating that if all the salt contained in the water annually evaporated from the north-east trade wind region of the Atlantic could be heaped into one place, it would cover an area equal to the British Islands to the depth of fourteen feet.

A moment's reflection will serve to show that in latitudes where there is a great evaporating power, and but slight diluting influence, the sea water must necessarially be rich in salts; and that in latitudes where the contrary conditions exist, the water must be poor. That such is the case has been proved, and it is attested among other signs, by the color of the water, which in rainy, sunless districts, is of a light green; in rainless, sunny places of a deep blue-vitriol blue. The compensatory balance between briny water and brackish is kept up by a system of currents, which pervades the whole ocean. These currents, running from north to south, and from the south to the north, are the means of equalizing, to some extent, the charge of saline properties which the waters respectively hold in solution, the water of the cold climates being strengthened by the heavily-laded salt streams from the south, the southern waters being refreshed, as it were, with a drink from the comparatively fresh waters of the north. But after all has been done, the equatorial seas are still so rich in salts that they have a super-abundance, and are glad to be rid of their burden to anything that requires it. An abundant demand is kept up by the myriads of coral creatures which live and move and have their being in the tropical seas, and require for the purposes of their work an amount of calcareous and saline matter, proportionate to that which the over-burdened waters have to spare. The excess is drawn by them on demand, and appropriated to those manufactures which these small workers undertake to the glory of their Maker.

The source of salts is found in the washing of the coast and in the contributions which rivers bring. Rivers, in their way to the sea, gather from brooks, springs, surface drainage, and other such sources a great quantity of soluble matter; they wash down, also, a considerable amount of earth which the sea water can, though they cannot, dissolve. Into the great reservoir of the ocean they fling their silty cargo, which is absorbed in the pores of the water, and is then distributed by means of the ocean's circulatory system already adverted to.

The sea is salt by reason of the earth washings poured into it, it has different densities because of the influence of rainfalls, rivers and evaporation; it is prevented from stagnating by a universal system of ocean-currents; and it yields out of its abundance materials for the building up of continents yet to be. Such are the facts and conclusions involved in the consideration of the saltness of the sea.

A Fish Story.

A Boston correspondent of the Forest and Stream tells the following remarkable story. The scene is laid in Long Island, where, on the shore of a pond, the correspondent was watching the play of swallows as they skimmed just over the surface of the water shortly before sunset. About a hundred yards out was a bed of lily pads; and as the swallows skipped it, occasionally a good-sized ripple could be seen, and sometimes a break from the edges indicated a fish there. This fastened my attention to the particular place. I had often seen cats play with swallows, swooping at them, but the idea of a fish doing the same was something new to me. Presently I saw a clean breach, and a fine large pickerel showed his whole size and got a swallow too, as he disappeared beneath the water. This I saw repeated several times, and I called the attention of my companion to this novel sight. While we were watching we saw two large fish break after the same swallow, the fish coming from opposite directions, and each head on to each. Both missed the swallow, but, singular to relate, only one fish was seen to drop into the water, and neither was seen to pass the other. My companion and myself looked with wonder. There was a great commotion in the water, with a continuous spattering, and a boat being handy we jumped in and rowed to the spot, and picked up the largest pond pickerel I ever saw. When we had him in the boat the mystery was solved; the smaller of the fish, had in his eagerness for the swallow, jumped clear down the larger one's throat, and only the tail, to the extent of about an inch, showed. The larger fish was completely rent asunder and killed by the catastrophe. Both together weighed twenty-two pounds.

Brother Jonathan.

The origin of this term as applied to the United States, is as follows: When General Washington, after being appointed commander of the Revolutionary army, went to Massachusetts to organize it, he found a great want of ammunition and other means of defence; and on one occasion it seemed that no means could be devised for the necessary safety. Jonathan Trumbull the elder was then governor of the State of Connecticut; and the general, placing the greatest reliance on his Excellency's judgment, remarked, "We must consult Brother Jonathan on the subject." The general did so, and the governor was successful in supplying many of the wants of the army; and thenceforward—when difficulties arose, and the army was spread over the country—it became a by-phrase, "We must consult Brother Jonathan." And the name has now become a designation for the whole country, as John Bull has for England.

Sponge Growing.

The universal and increasing demand for sponges, and the unremitting drain to which all the best "fisheries" are subjected, has led to a partial dearth in the supply of these useful articles; but art, which has thus threatened the extinction of the supply has in this, as in many similar cases, stepped in to restore the balance. It is only within the last few years that the real nature of the sponge has been recognized. In its natural state it is a disagreable and almost repulsive looking object, the soft, fibrous mass, which every one is so familiar with, being hidden beneath, and its incracies being filled up by a slimy, gelatinous substance, which rapidly putrifies, and adds ten-fold to the generally disagreable nature of the thing. The tenacity with which these objects affix themselves to rocks and stones suggests the idea that they are a species of vegetable, though they really belong to the animal kingdom, and are allied to the anemones and other zoophytes, with the beautiful appearance of many of which the public aquaria have to make us acquainted.

A sponge is nothing more than an animated stomach, which, though the very lowest of all forms of animated life, is endowed with more reason than the stomachs of the many so called lords of creation, or mankind, inasmuch as it knows what is good and what is bad for it, and rejects the latter while it imbibes only the former. The gelatinous substance, which forms the actual body of the sponge, being beaten and washed out of it, the fibrous skeleton is left in the form in which it is sold in the shops. The search for these creatures employs an army of skilled divers, the principal sponge grounds being in the Greek Archipelago, and in other parts of the Mediterranean, in the Red Sea, in the Bahamas, and in other parts of the West Indies, and in some of the islands of the Pacific. The Colonies and India gives publicity to a fact which is likely to diminish the dangers attending the operation of sponging, and at the same time to increase the available supply of sponges.

It appears that two German naturalists have made the discovery that small pieces carefully cut from live sponges, and atached to boards or stones, and sunk in suitable places, will grow in a few months into large sponges, as though nothing had happened. This fact is of the utmost importance to our sponge growing colonies. Our contemporary suggests that a close time should be enacted in the Bahamas and other localities where sponges are diminishing in numbers; but with or without such a law, the possibility of growing sponges at will and increasing their number indefinately in the manner described by the German naturalists, should soon set at rest any doubts as to a falling off in the supply of these invaluable articles.

Founder and Laminitis.

Founder is a disease which requires the most prompt and efficacious treatment; and unless speedy relief be afforded, the complaint increases and soon degenerates into a more serious form of disease, and proves extremely difficult to cure. It may arise from various causes. The following, we believe, are those by which it is generally produced: 1. Drinking freely of cold water when heated by violent exercise, particularly when such exercise has been continued for some time. 2. Exposure to cold, wind or rain under the same circumstances. 3. Immoderate allowance of corn. This complaint consists of inflammation or fever, and begins with an appearance of weakness or loss of vital energy, followed by stiffness of the legs and body.

At the first attack of the malady, immersing the feet in tubs of warm water for twenty-four hours will generally be found an effectual remedy; but if it be neglected is most commonly succeeded by laminitis. Laminitis exists in the form of local inflamnation in the foot, which very soon diffuses itself to the laminated structure, and does great injury to these important members, occasioning severe pain and lameness, and proving extremely difficult to cure. When we consider that the horse's weight is suspended by these laminæ, as a carriage by its springs, and though the bottom of the internal foot is in contact with the sole, it, nevertheless, does not press upon it considerably, except when the horse is in motion, and the back part of the laminæ elongates and descends upon the sole in a small degree, it will readily appear that when these elastic membranes are no longer capable of supporting and moving under the weight, the internal foot must press upon the sole, which flattens or convexes it, and is commonly known as the drop sole or pummice foot. When laminæ are thus affected, the malady generally proceeds to a complete separation between the crust and the internal parts. The crust then loses its proper form, and becomes flatter, appearing as if it was forced upward from the ground. When this separation takes place, the accidental cavity is filled with a precipitation of horny, fungous matter.—Western Rural.

Statistics of divorces in Massachusetts exhibit an extraordinary and alarming increase. Since 1860 no less than 7,283 divorces have been obtained in that model state. Since 1860 the number of yearly divorces have increased in that state from 243 to 600, while the number of marriages have increased only from 12,469 to 12,853. The ratio of divorces to marriages in the state in 1860 was 1 to 21.4. The statistics were prepared by Mr. Carroll B. Wright, one of the most careful statisticians in the country. In Vermont the ratio for the last eight or ten years is 1 divorce to 10 marriages; in Rhode Island, 1 to 14; in Connecticut, 1 to 11.

A sappy looking young fellow enters a clothing store to get a suit of clothes. He has been through the other clothing stores, and as he enters, one of the clerks slips a fifteen cent pocket book down the inside pocket of a coat he thought would fit the fellow. He soon asks to try the coat on, and of course fumbles into all the pockets of the coat. He never changes a muscle of his face when he touches the pocket book—nor does the clerk—but indifferently asks the price. "Twenty dollars," the clerk replies although it was worth only ten. The fellow pays it without a whimper, but it is safely presumed that he afterward became a sadder and a wiser man.

The Red Mask.

You have seen persons afflicted with Erysipelas? Well, it is an awful thing. It disfigures the face almost beyond recognition, and is as dangerous as it is repulsive. It often causes sudden death, and is sometimes called "St. Anthony's Fire." Mr. S. B. Carpenter, of Grandville, N. Y., had it in both legs, and was cured by the use of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." His health is now perfect.—Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is the very life of the blood.

Mr. Walter F. Adams, of Westboro, Mass., writes: "For years I suffered the horrors of dyspepsia and indigestion. They seemed to weaken every organ of life, and completely shattered my nervous system. At night when I lay down I felt I could not live until morning. Heartburn pained me most terribly. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters; it suited my case precisely, and now my stomach digests any kind of food, and my sallow complexion and other symptoms of ill health are all gone, and at night I enjoy most refreshing, dreamless slumber."

THE Christmas tree exercises at the Universalist church last Saturday evening passed off very pleasantly. The children acquitted themselves finely in the concert piece and went home happy with their arms full of Christmas gifts at the close.

E. H. TALMAGE, of Leroy, N. Y., is now at J. R. Keeney's in Franklin, where he has on sale 56 fine ewes from Vermont, all registered in the V. S. B. A. Twenty-six of them are straight Atwoods, direct from Hammonds flock. Parties wishing good sheep would do well to call soon and examine them.

To all our patrons, from Maine to California, and from Minnesota to Texas, whether high or low, rich or poor, the inhabitant of the humble cottage and the dweller in the pretentious mansion, the artisan and artist, the merchant and laborer, whatever their lot in life may be, we extend our congratulations and wish them all a HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Adrian Press: Geo. B. Horton, President of the Agricultural Society, has been offered and has refused $10,000 for the oak timber on his farm in Fairfield. It strikes us that is overlooking a pretty good offer, and that a $10,000 forest is a pretty expensive luxury. Those oak trees are soon to become dead timber, and if we owned them (if) why we—wouldn't own 'em long that's certain.

Adrian Times: The case of George Sparrow vs. the Lake Shore railroad, which was so hotly contested in the circuit court for this county in two trials during the past year, and finally resulted in a judgment in favor of Sparrow, will not be carried to the supreme court as was anticipated, as vouchers for over $400, covering the costs and judgment, were this morning received from the company by B. F. Graves, attorney for Sparrow.

WE understand that several ladies of Tecumseh intend to receive New Year's calls this year. Monday, Jan. 2d. will probably be observed. Saturday, Dec. 31st, will be a very busy day in business circles, and as New Years falls on Sunday the succeeding day becomes the proper legal holiday. The ladies who expect to keep open houses are requested to leave their names at the HERALD Counting Room, where a full list will be kept for the inspection of interested parties.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON of the M. E. church has issued for the use of his congregation a very neat program of services to be held in his church for the week beginning with Jan. 1 and ending Sunday Jan. 8, 1882.

PHILLIP TOTTEN, of Petoskey has been in town for several days assisting in the care of his brother William, who has been quite sick. William is about again now and Philip will spend a few days in visiting before his return.

NEXT week will be observed by the different churches as a week of prayer. The business men of our village have done all they could about muddy roads and damp weather, but have made a total failure. We would now respectfully refer the matter to the churches, and perhaps if the matter is carefully agitated during the coming week, we may have a freeze up and a little more dryness.

LAST Sunday evening at the Presbyterian church the pastor delivered a sermon to the Sunday School, illustrated with large oil paintings, the subject of the sermon being taken from one of the last quarter's lessons, and showing the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness by Moses. Next Sunday evening a similar discourse will be given to the school, on the subject of the deluge. The regular evening service will be introduced by a praise meeting of half an hour's length.

Blissfield Advance: Presbyterian ministers are not supposed to be much in favor of immersion, but it so happens that once in a while one is compelled to give his assent, whether voluntarily or otherwise. This was the case with Mr. Arney the other day, when his horse frightened at some break that happened to the wagon, became unmanageable and threw him into a ditch containing several feet of water. Fortunately for his fall in the water, he escaped with only a few bruises.

LAST Sunday evening a very pleasant episode occurred at the M. E. church. At the close of the service which was conducted by the pastor and Sunday School, Rev. R. S. Pardington in a few fitting remarks presented to Dr. R. B. House in behalf of the School a complete set of Irving's works. The Doctor, although taken by surprise, acknowledged the compliment in a few heartfelt remarks which showed his deep interest in the Sunpay School under his charge, and the gift disclosed the esteem in which the Doctor is held by the school.

Adrian Times: This morning officer Barley left on the Lake Shore train for Detroit having in charge Anna Taylor, who was sentenced to the house of correction for three months. When the train was in the vicinity of Deerfield and running at a very high rate of speed, she asked permission to go to the water closet, which was granted. Not reappearing in reasonable time, the officer went to the platform and found the gentle Anna trying to crawl out of the window.—Seizing her by the heels he soon pulled her into the car, when she became so violent that it was found necessary to handcuff her. Had she escaped from the window death would have been inevitable, as the train was under full headway.

RICHARD CALDWELL'S furniture auction which was postponed last Saturday on account of the sickness of his son, will be held at the Opera House on Saturday, Dec. 31, 1881.

UNION temperance meetings will be held during the week of prayer in the several churches alternately, at 3 o'clock P. M., conducted by the pastor. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Adrian Press: The Prosecuting Attorney who appeared for the people in the celebrated trial of Voschamp for the murder of a farmer named Cady, of Ottawa county, was a former well-known Deerfield boy, "Wash" McBride, who is now serving his third term as Prosecuting Attorney. In describing the trial the Grand Haven News takes occasion to praise in glowing language the argument of McBride before the jury and says that a storm of applause that the Sheriff could not repress burst from the court room audience as McBride closed.—The prisoner was convicted and sentenced for life.

ADRIAN COLLEGE.

The Lambda Phi and the Star literary societies celebrated their anniversaries in Plymouth Methodist church, Wednesday and Thursday nights, Dec. 21 and 22nd. Notwithstanding the very rainy weather there was a fair audience each night. The performers showed that they were familiar with the subjects they discussed, and did honor to themselves and the societies they represented. In all that was said there was to be noticed a knowledge of and reverence for the christian religion, that showed the young men and women to be of much moral worth.

FAMILY FESTIVAL.

MR. EDITOR:—Last Saturday, Dec. 24, it was the privilege of my family and self to attend the annual festival of the Knittin family at East Ridgeway. It was held at the residence of the widow, and although the roads were almost impassable, the whole of that large and interesting family group assembled at an early hour. It was pleasing to witness the happy greetings, and the social courtesies, as the members met, kissed and shook hands with each other. There sat the widow, her four sturdy sons and three excellent companions, her five lady daughters with their valuable and exemplary husbands and more than a full score of grand children. A portion of the time was devoted to conversation and to private congratulatory addresses. The entrance to the dining room is from the reception department of the dwelling, and its appearance was very inviting. There we beheld the table covered with snow white linen and porcelain, the knapkins were artistically folded and every other thing ornamentally and beautifully arranged, while the lady waitresses were noiselessly gliding about, giving the finishing touches to the table, preparatory to the advent of the company to partake of a dinner, which in point of excellence, variety and cooking, is not excelled in this part of the country. The members of this family, especially the daughters, have had considerable experience in the cook room and are posessed of amiable dispositions and spare no pains in making each other comfortable and feel at home. After the festivities, one of the sisters, Mrs. A. Smith of Ridgeway village, presided at the organ and the company engaged in pouring forth sweet and melodious strains of spiritual music upon the ear, after which an appropriate psalm was read, and thanks offered to the donor of all good for the privileges of the occasion, after which the happy company took their leave from each other, with a good hope to meet again next Christmas.

A Pioneer Family Gathering.

The surviving members of the family of the late Deacon William Bradley, of Franklin, who came to Michigan in 1835, with his wife and twelve children, and settled in the township of Franklin, whilst Michigan was yet a territory, have been in the habit of having occasional family gatherings since the death of their parents in 1869-70. Both parents lived to see all their children married and well started in life; and the twelve children and twelve children-in-law were all assembled at the old homestead in January, 1856, about as near the time of what would have been the golden wedding of the venerable couple, as all the children could conveniently be got together. On the occasion a large family bible, with the names of all the children and their several partners inscribed on one of the fly-leaves, was presented to them. This much-prized relic is now the property of John J. Adam, who purchased and presented the book in behalf of himself and all the other assembled children. On Saturday, the 24th inst., six of the seven surviving children, with their wives or husbands and some grand-children, and other connections, met at the residence of Mr. Adam, for an ante-Christmas family dinner and a social gathering.

A Physician's Advice of How to Gain Health.

Harrisburgh, P., March 30, 1881.

Nothing is more charming and attractive than a thoroughly healthy, perfectly formed woman; a bright eyed, rosy, laughing, joyous, happy-faced girl, one who finds keen pleasure in merely living. An invalid wife or mother is a constant object of sympathy in an otherwise contented household. Happy the home where woman folk enjoy perfect health. In my practice I have always recommended sickly women to use Brown's Iron Bitters. In case of irregularities, dyspepsia, indigestion, heartburn, nausea, sour stomach, nervousness, and exhaustive debility, I find it exceeds all other remedies as a true medicinal tonic. It never fails to gently soothe, refresh and strengthen the general system, and especially those parts made weak by continued distress; and what satisfies me most is, that the cures although in some instances gradual, are always permanent.—M. D.

Deerfield Record: A letter was received by his friends here, stating that Rev. E. Dawes started on Dec. 9d, on the steamer State of Georgia, from Glasgow for New York city. If the steamer had made her trip across the ocean in safety, he would have arrived here about the 18th. By a telegram in the daily press, it has been learned that the Georgia was sighted off Queenstown, England, on the 15th, under sail for that port for repairs, her engines having been disabled. Thus after being thirte days at sea the steamer was obliged to turn back. It is not known now when he will start again on his return trip to this village.

FARMERS' CLUB.

The Farmers' Social Club was largely attended at F. C. Rector's Friday evening, Dec. 16th. There were a number of visitors present, who are always welcome.

The program was well carried out.

In select reading Fred Hendershot gave the trial of Josiah Allen's wife in taking summer boarders.

Emma Schreder gave an essay upon home adornments. She handled her subject well and advocated making home so attractive that saloons and the street lost their attractions for husbands, fathers and brothers.

There was vocal and instrumental music, also a vocal piece by Leville Hendershot.

The question, Resolved, That the ladies have as many inventions for their benefit, in saving labor, as the gentlemen, was introduced by E. L. Russell. The question was discussed very generally and in all its points, but it being very hard to decide which had the more inventions for their benefit, it was decided a draw, with the benefit of a doubt on the ladies side.

Meeting adjourned to meet Friday evening, Jan. 6th, 1882, at John Benedict's.

The following is the program:

Singing.
Select Reading—Geo. Henderson.
Singing—Rhoda Benedict.
Essay—Eva Rector.
Instrumental music.
Question—When is the best time to plant our clover seed, and what way. Introduced by R. B. Gillespie.

MRS. F. C RECTOR, Sec.

Kleptomania.

SOME CURIOUS CASES OF ITS DEVELOPMENT.

Some curious cases of kleptomania are mentioned in Chambers' Journal: "A lady was affected with this monomania so strongly that, upon her trial for theft, she stated that she had such a mad longing to possess herself of every thing she saw that if she were at church she could not refrain from stealing from the altar. Dr. Rush, the American physician, informs us that a woman who was exemplary in her obedience to the moral law except the Eighth Commandment, was so addicted to larceny that, when she could take nothing more valuable, she would often at the table of a friend secretly fill her pockets with bread. Lavater also states that a doctor of medicine could not leave his patient's rooms without taking something away unobserved, and his wife searched his pockets and returned to their owners the knives, thimbles, scissors, etc. which her husband abstracted. The wife of another physician had so strong a propensity to steal that on making purchases she endeavored to take something away that did not belong to her, and two German Countesses appear to have been guilty of the same vice. The almoner of a regiment of Prussian cuirassiers, a well educated man, frequently on parade stole the handkerchiefs of the officers; and one unfortunate man was so far under the influence of kleptomania that, being nigh unto death, he actually secreted the snuff-box of his confessor.

As to modern instances of this species of insanity, we knew of a parish clergyman who stole every article he could lay his hands on. If out at dinner, he pocketed scraps of bread, table-napkins, or anything. When lodging at hotels he carried off pieces of soap and the ends of candles from his bedroom. His larcenies became so notorious that he was ultimately brought before the Church Courts and turned out of his living.

Dr. Gall mentions an instance of two citizens of Vienna who on becoming insane, were well known in the hospital for an extraordinary propensity to steal, although they had before lived irreproachable lives. They wandered about from morning to night and picked up whatever they could lay their hands on, which they carefully hid in their rooms. Abnormal conformations of the head accompanied with an imbecile understanding are often the cause of kleptomania. Gall and Spurzheim saw in Bern Prison a boy twelve years old, who is described as 'ill-organized and rickety,' who could never avoid stealing. An Ex-Commissioner of Police at Toulouse was condemned to eight years' imprisonment and hard labor to the pillory for having stolen some plate while in office. He did not deny the crime, but persisted to the last in a singular kind of defence. He attributed the crime to a mental derangement caused by wounds he had received at Marseilles."

Blunders of Speech.

A German author has made a collection of metaphors, which he calls pearls of thought. Some of them are worth quoting, if only as a warning to high-flown orators not to allow their magnilojence to fly away with them altogether. "We will," cried an inspired democrat, "burn all our ships, and, with every sail unfurled, steer boldly out into the ocean of freedom!" Even that flight is surpassed by an effort of Justice Miller Hye, who, in 1848, in a speech to the Vienna students, impressively declared: "The chariot of the revolution is rolling along, and gnashing its teeth as it rolls!" A pan-Germanist Mayor of a Rhineland corporation rose still higher in an address to the Emperor. He said: "No Austria, no Prussia, only one Germany; such were the words the mouth of your Imperial Majesty has always had in its eye!" We have heard of the mouth having an eye-tooth, but never before of the mouth's eye. But there are even literary men who cannot open their mouths "without putting their foot in it." Prof. Johannes Scherr is an example of such. In a criticism on Lenau's lyrics he writes: "Out of the dark regions of philosophical problems the poet suddenly let swarms of song dive up, carrying far-flashing pearls of thought in their beaks." Songs and beaks are certainly related to one another, but were never seen in that incongruous connection before. A German preacher, speaking of a repentant girl, said: "She knelt in the temple of her interior, and prayed fervently," a feat no India-rubber doll could imitate. The German parliamentary oratory of the present day affords many examples of metaphor mixture; but two must suffice. Count Frankenberg is the author of them. A few years ago he pointed out to his countrymen the necessity of "seizing the stream of time by the forelock;" and, in the last session, he told the Minister of War that if he really thought the French were seriously attached to peace, he had better resign office and "return to his paternal oxen." The Count had, no doubt, the poet's paterna rura in his mind at the time. But none of these pearls of thought and expression in Fatherland surpass the speech of the immortal Joseph Prudhomme, on being presented with a sword of honor by the company he commanded in the National Guard of France. "Gentlemen," said he, "this sword is the brightest day of my life!"

How Hats were "Chalked

The cant phrase, "Chalk your hat," which is still current in many parts of the Union, is said to have had its origin in a literal illustration of the words. "Admiral" Reeside was an owner of various stage coaches in the days before railroads. He spent much time in Washington, where, indeed, he lived for several years. At the annual adjournment of Congress he would pass his friends of the House and Senate. he was well acquainted with all prominent politicians of his era—over any stage line he controlled. He would say to an Ohioan or Kentuckian: "I suppose you're going back to Cincinnati or Louisville, and I'll pass you through by stage." When he was asked: "How?" he would reply: "Give me your hat." He would take the hat, make a cabalistic chalk mark on it impossible to counterfeit, and return it with the remark. "That will serve your turn; my agents will recognize that anywhere, and won't receive a cent from the man whose hat is so marked." Reeside was right. All his agents knew the sign at once. The thing became so common that some fellows tried to imitate it, but they were detected at once and compelled to leave the stage or pay their fare. In the South and West "Chalk your hat" still stands for what the East styles deadheading.

Good Advice.

The Chemical News gives the following pertinent piece of advice to the young student of science in Great Britain, (and neither young nor old students on this side of the Atlantic need evade reading it, at least.) When a man has got so far as to define, even in his secret thoughts, science as a mere something to be examined into, he is intellectually dead. In conjunction with this caution we must make a demand upon the moral nature of the student. We must exhort him, at whatever cost of time and labor, to eschew cram, including under the term all the tricks and dodges by which a really undisciplined mind is made to put on a false appearance of mastership. It is not safe to argue that the English system of examination, being essentially a sham, may be legitimately evaded. He who wins degrees and diplomas by deceit will have acquired habits of dishonesty which will cling to him in after life, and which will manifest themselves in a propensity for trimming and cooking results, for suppressing inconvenient facts, and forging evidences for a tottering theory. He who cheats examiners in his youth will in after life be able to cheat scientific societies and the learned world at large for his own glorification, and may for a time succeed.

Woman's True Friend.

A friend in need is a friend indeed. This none can deny, especially when assistance is rendered when one is sorely afflicted with disease, more particularly those complaints and weaknesses so common to our female population. Every woman should know that Electric Bitters are woman's true friend, and will positively restore her to health, even when all other remedies fail. A single trial always proves our assertion. They are pleasant to the taste and only cost fifty cents a bottle. Sold at Star of Bethlehem Coming.

Prof. C. A. Grimmer, of Kingston, Jamaica, who is a scientist of fame, recently made some wonderful prophecies in connection with the action of the planets and other heavenly bodies. He says of the "Star of Bethlehem:" In 1887 the "Star of Bethlehem" will be once more seen in "Casseopia's chair," and it will be accompanied by a total eclipse of sun and moon. The star only makes its appearance every 315 years. It will appear and illuminate the heavens, and exceed in brilliancy even Jupiter when in opposition to the sun, and, therefore, nearer to the sun, and brightest. The marvelous brilliancy of the "Star of Bethlehem" in 1887 will surpass any of its previous visitations. It will be seen even by noonday, shining with a quick, flashing light the entire year, after which it will gradually decrease in brightness, and finally disappear, not to return to our heavens till 2202, or 315 years after 1887. This star first attracted the attention of modern astronomers in the year 1575. It was then called a new star. It was no new star, however, for this was the star which shone so brightly 4 B. C., and was the star that illuminated the heavens at the nativity of Christ.—Washington Republican.

A Remarkable Coincidence.

It is a matter of journalistic record, that some years since, a schooner set sail from Baltimore, having on board a crew of thirteen men. By a most singular freak of nature, the entire force was attacked by a skin disease, which manifested itself in large ulcerated sores on the arms and hands, wholly incapacitating the men from duty. The result was that the vessel was towed back to the city where the men were placed in the hospital.—Moral! Had Swayne's Ointment for skin diseases been used in the first place, the crew would have recovered in from 12 to 48 hours.

A Novel Egg Farm.

The Farallone Islands are about 30 miles from the mouth of San Francisco Bay, and they are the home of innumerable sea fowls. When San Francisco first began to be a city, its constantcry was for eggs. To supply the lack of eggs, the project of stealing those of the gulls and the murhrs of the Farrallone Islands was undertaken, and it proved successful and has ever since been maintained. The birds are too plenty to count or to estimate, as may be inferred from the fact that the egg gatherers bring in often, or used to gather, 500 dozen in a day; and a great many of the nests are inaccessable a great many others devastated by the rivalry of the birds themselves, and of course, a large part of the birds at any one time are not laying. The egg season is from May to August, and, if even 400 dozen is the rule, the harvest would be pretty near 500,000 eggs. The quarreling between the gulls and the murhrs leads to the loss of a good many murhrs' eggs, which the gulls at every chance destroy. The egg business is conducted by a company, which has the right. It pays egg gatherers five cents a dozen, and sells them in San Francisco at a considerable advance.

A Testament Reviser's Opinion.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the new testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

HAZARDOUS JOURNEY.—When a strong east wind blows over the Sea of Azoy the water retires in a remarkable manner, and the people living on one shore can cross to the other dry-shod. But this hazardous journey sometimes involves the fate of Pharaoh, for a sudden change of wind will bring the water quickly back to its usual place, and travelers are frequently swallowed up by the fickle waves.

You get an entire meal, as good as is served in any first-class hotel, for seventy-five cents.

Appreciating the fact that a majority of the people prefer separate apartments for different purposes (and the immense passenger business of this line warranting it), we are pleased to announce that this Company runs Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars for sleeping purposes, and Palace Dining Cars for eating purposes only. One other great feature of our Palace Cars is a SMOKING SALOON where you can enjoy your "Havana" at all hours of the day.

Magnificent Iron Bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers at all points crossed by this line, and transfers are avoided at Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Atchison, connections being made in Union Depots.

Entertaining Friends.

I once overheard a little bit of talk between two school girls, one of whom said: "Well, the Ames family are coming to our house next week, and for my part I dread it. I don't expect to have a mite of enjoyment while they are with us. I cannot entertain people." I have forgotten her companion's reply; but I know that the feeling is common among young people, and when guests arrive they often slip off the responsibility of making them happy upon papa and mamma. This is hardly fair. The art of hospitality is really as easily acquired as a knowledge of geography or grammar.

In the first place, the young girls in a family when expecting friends of their own age should see that their rooms are pleasantly arranged, the beds freshly made, toilet soap provided, and plenty of towels and water at hand. Not new towels, dear girls; they are hard and slippery, nobody likes them. There should be a comb and brush, a button hook, pins in plenty, and space in the closet to hang dresses and coats, as well as an empty drawer in the bureau at the guest's service. By attending to these little things themselves, girls can take quite a burden from their busy mothers. Then boys and girls should have in mind some sort of plan by which to carry on operations during the days of their friends' stay. So far as possible it is well to lay aside unnecessary work for the time. As for the morning and evening duties which belong to every day's course, attend to them faithfully, but do not let them drag. Never make apologies if you happen to have some occupation which you fear may seem very humble in the eyes of your guest. All home service is honorable.

If you live in the country there will be fishing, nutting, climbing, riding, driving and exploring; all of which you can offer to your friends. Be sure that you have fishing tackle, poles and baskets, harness in order and, in short, everything in readiness for your various expeditions. To most out-of-door excursions a nice luncheon is an agreeable addition, and you need not upset the house nor disturb the cook in order to arrange this, for sandwiches, gingerbread, cookies, crackers and similar simple refreshments, can be obtained in most homes without much difficulty. Every boy, as well as every girl, should know how to make a good cup of coffee by a woodland fire.

In town there are museums, picture galleries and concerts, as well as various shows, to delight guests from a distance. In the season you can take them to the beach or the park. But whether in town or country, do not wear your friends out by too much going about, nor never let them feel that you are taking trouble for them, nor yet that they are neglected. Forget your own convenience, but remember their comfort. Study their tastes and consult their wishes in a quiet way.—Harper's Young People.

Good Words and True.

To those who pick up a daily paper, read a column or two of criminal news and then jump at the conclusion that all mankind is hastening to the demnition bow-wows, we commend the following from an exchange:

The earth never had so many good men and women as to-day. Never did civilization so assert its power in works of benevolence and in alleviating human suffering as now. And yet, from the news in the daily papers, one would get the idea that the devil had been turned loose, and was holding high carnival, and that the spirit of all good had departed from the world. A thousand good deeds and a multitude of blessings go unheralded, while a villainous crime flies on the wings of the wind, and by the agency of lightning to the utmost parts of the earth. There is a morbid public sentiment which seems to rollick amid miseries and crimes, and is unsatisfied without something inhuman, sensational, and brutal. It wants the horrifying particulars of a murder in the newspaper at the breakfast table, and the more minute the better. The way for the daily paper to escape chronicling these horrid events is not clear, and yet that such reports ought to be curtailed is most evident. In a neighboring city, a short time since, a trial took place in the courts of justice; the facts, as told by the witnesses, were of the most vulgar, debasing character. A newspaper published verbatim reports. Teachers in the public schools and the superintendent of instruction reported that they found large numbers of the papers publishing these reports stowed away in the desks of both boys and girls, and that they had difficulty, even in school hours, in keeping them from being read. There is no mistaking the fact there is a large field for reform in the reading offered to the young. Good books never so abounded. Never before were so many men and women busy with brain and pen anxious to contribute to the intelligence and education of the race. What these thinkers want and should have is the co-operation of parents and teachers, that the generation coming into place and power may be clothed with the pure habiliments of manhood and womanhood, and fitted for the grand work of closing up the nineteenth century.

Let no man presume to give good advice to others that has not first given good counsel to himself.—[Seneca.

How is it possible to expect that mankind will take advice when they will not as much as take warning.—[Swift.

Remember this: they that will not be counseled cannot be helped. If you do not hear reason she will rap your knuckle.—[Franklin.

He that gives good advice builds with one hand; he that gives good counsel and example builds with the other; but he that gives good admonition and bad example builds with one hand and pulls down with the other.—[Bacon.

A Physician of Great Prominence

in thirty-sixth street, New York city was unable to even help Mr. Wm. McKee, of Patterson, N. J., suffering the agonies always attendant upon diseased kidneys. As an honest man and practitioner he prescribed and cured him by using one bottle of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Death to rats and vermin, Parsons' Exterminator.

A Discouraged Housekeeper.

"I think," said a New York lady, "the serenity of the housekeepers I have met since coming to Ohio, is marvelous. They have been burning soft coal these years, yet I do not see but their foreheads are as unfurrowed and their hair as unchanged as the favored women of the anthracite regions. I confess I wouldn't have cared to have any of you peep into my bed-room yesterday morning, and see the forlorn object seated on a hassock, actually crying, 'amid the wreck of matter and the crush—of tinware. Imagine the scene. There had been a fire in the stove for a week or more, but it had gone out, the wind being contrary and the draught not good. A large quantity of soot had accumulated in the pipe; it is astonishing how a pipe can fill up with soot filaments; I never saw anything like it before. The feet of the stove did not fit very well; paradoxically speaking, they were infirm, because they were not in firm. Very gently, I thought I administered a shaking, which was soon followed by a quaking; first one foot fell out, then another, the stove careened, and, horror of horrors! the tall column of pipe swayed, and "what a fall was there, my countrymen!" The soot poured itself out upon the carpet; but 'twas the last drop in the bucket that drowned my amiability for, at the fatal moment, there happened to be a tin pail (New York vocabulary) full of water standing on the stove. It collapsed, and its contents meandered across the carpet in devious ways, mingling with the soot, in a blackened tide; and there over the prostrate stove-pipe, I did not hesitate to declare my utter detestation of bituminous coal. I have faithfully scrubbed with ammonia my drenched carpet yet the trail of the serpent is over it all I suppose I shall get used to it; they all do, they say; but I don't feel a bit resigned as yet."

A Word to Mothers.

Mother should remember it is a most important duty at this season to look after the health of their families and cleanse the malaria and impurities from their systems, and that nothing will tone up the stomach and liver, regulate the bowels and purify the blood so perfectly as Parker's Ginger Tonic, advertised in our columns.

Rubber Balls.

The process of making hollow rubber balls used by children as playthings is quite curious, and may be interesting to those not familiar with it. A Holyoke writer thus describes it:

These balls have a solid surface, and are made by a different process from that of making the soft rubber balls (which are perforated by an opening,) and of course, are much more firm, durable and elastic. The sheets of rubber prepared for balls are cut into strips of double convex shape. The edges of the strips are moistened with a preparation of rubber and naptha, by which they are joined firmly together, three of the strips being used for one ball.

This part of the work is done by girls, and a skillful girl can earn about $1.50 per day. When the strips are joined together, the ball is very near the shape of a Brazil nut. Before the last opening is closed a quantity of carbonate of ammonia is put inside, which, when subjected to strong heat, will make the rubber expand and fill out the ball mold. The opening is then closed with the adhesive mixture, and it is placed in an iron mold of the size and shape of the ball desired. The molds are packed into frames, in which they are subjected to the heat of a vulcanizer.

They are kept in place in the frame by iron rods along the side, and when the frame is full, iron plates at the end are screwed down tightly upon the molds to hold them in place. These iron plates are about three-fourths of an inch thick, and so strong is the expansive force of the rubber in the molds that they bend this thick iron rod into a curve. If one of the molds should work out of place while vulcanizing is in process, the molds would fly out with a noise like the report of a dozen pistols, and the work is spoiled. The action of the heat does the rest. When the molds are opened they contain the perfect round balls, with no mark of the places where the pieces were placed. The slight ridge made by the mold is ground off by a stone, and the ball is done.

THE HIGHER PLANE.—In this scientific age, when everything is analyzed, and unatomized, and tabulated, there is a tendency to talk of knowledge as a power to which all things are subject. But the maxim that knowledge is power is true only where knowledge is the main thing wanted. There are higher things than knowledge in the world—there are living energies; and in the moral world, surely, it is not knowledge, but aspiration, that is the moving power, and the wing of aspiration is prayer. Where aspiration is wanted, the soul creeps; it cannot fly; it is at best a caged bird, curiously busy in counting and classifying the bars of its own confinement.

An Interesting Fact.

In France, all patent medicines must be endorsed by an official board of physicians before they can be sold. In lieu of such a law in America, the people have resolved themselves into a National committee which has endorses Swayne's Ointment for allaying the itching accompanying the Piles, as the only reliable remedy in the market. Its a poor rule that won't work both ways.

The origin of the word "newspaper" is not, as many suppose, from the fact of its containing new things; but in a former time (1795 to 1830) it was customary to put over the periodical publications of the day the initial letters of the compass, N. E. W. S., to show that the journal had information from all quarters of the globe, North, East, West, and South. Hence the use of the word news before all papers of general information.

"Always varied, always good, always improving."—CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR.

Harper's Magazine, the most popular illustrated periodical in the world, begins its sixty-fourth volume with the December number. It represents what is best in American literature and art; and its marked success in England—where it has already a circulation larger than that of any English magazine of the same class—has brought into its service the most eminent writers and artists of Great Britain. The forthcoming volumes for 1882 will in every respect surpass their predecessors.

ARTHURS'

HOME MAGAZINE.

New and Increased Attractions!

The Home Magazine occupies, and has always occupied, a field especially its own. While gathering for its pages from the whole range of general literature, the editor and his efficient co-laborers exercise the most careful discrimination in regard to quality and influence. Nothing is admitted which, in their view, can give false ideas of life, or weaken the bonds of virtue. No matter what may be the reputation, nor how brilliant the talents of the writer, if his moral teachings are at all questionable, they can not find a place in our magazine.—And beyond this, its publishers claim that in its peculiar character and varied departments it is more thoroughly identified with the people in their every-day life and home and social interests than any other first-class periodical.

The Home Magazine for 1882 will be the most interesting and attractive that has yet appeared.

WHAT OUR SUBSCRIBERS SAY.

"The day on which the Home Magazine comes is hailed every month with joy, not only by myself, but the whole family. It is like the face of an old friend."

"I cannot send off this letter without saying how pleased we are with the Home Magazine. We find it next to impossible to do without it."
